JOHN MILES

Wholesale Millinery Goods

610-612-614 BROADWAY }
2-4-6-8-10-12-14-16 EAST HOUSTON STREET } NEW YORK

Pioneer of the Cash System in the Millinery Trade

JOHN MILES, INCORPORATED

Left an orphan at the age of eleven years in 1872, John Miles started in as a cash boy in a Grand street department store, his salary being $2.50 per week, but in a very short time was increased to $4.50. Not being satisfied with this amount, he utilized his spare time to any available work that would increase his means. When it came to his vacation, instead of spending what little he had, he worked on a farm and added to his savings. The proprietor of the Grand street store saw that he had in this boy a remarkable and valuable character, and his advancements were quick; but with his energy and ambition to climb, it was no surprise to his associates when he left to take a position with the Eminent Millinery House of James G. Johnson & Co., New York, to travel for them, but all the time he was with this house his previous employers wanted him back, and finally he severed his connections with James G. Johnson & Co. and returned to the Grand street store as buyer of dress goods, silks, upholstery and millinery at the rate of two million dollars a year. At the same time he managed their wholesale millery department, which made it second to none in New York, but this could not last long in a man like John Miles. His aim was to be a great merchant, so in 1891 he rented a small room on the fifth floor of 96 Spring street with a capital of $50, and there on a 83 second-hand table he placed his stock, every article chosen that would be bound to attract attention and sell quickly.

It was only a few months before his success was assured. His first stock was quickly sold and larger stock added, and after six months' time he had to look around for larger quarters. He rented half of a loft at 603 Broadway, and shortly afterward occupied the entire floor. In 1892 he outgrew these quarters and secured more spacious ones at 654 Broadway, where he occupied three floors. He left these in 1897, and opened in the large building 636-638 Broadway, and from there he moved into his present enormous establishment 610-612-614 Broadway and 2-4-6-8-10-12-14-16 E. Houston street.

The lessons that John Miles had learned in the school of actual experience were aptly applied as is evidenced by the growth of his business from a small beginning to its prosperous and commendatory current state. He has made a most creditable record, and is to be counted among the representative merchants in Greater New York. He has contributed a fair share toward upholding the commercial renown of the city in all the essentials of serving his customers well and showing a high sense of responsibility.

The entire stock is admirably selected. It contains the best products of the importers and manufacturers, selections always being made to the best advantage by buyers entirely familiar with their branch of the trade, so that the retailer may rest assured of being well served. Much thought, time and effort are expended upon bringing together all that is suitable, and nowhere can a purchaser get better value or more courteous treatment. In fact, thorough knowledge of the sources of production and of the wants of the community enables this house to give its patrons special inducements in the way of variety.

Absolute reliability has been the Keystone of John Miles' success, and the elevated principles adopted by him in the beginning have always been adhered to.

RENNOUS, KLEINLE & COMPANY

Brush Manufacturers

BALTIMORE, MD.

Rennous, Kleinle & Co. is one of the largest and oldest brush manufacturing concerns in the United States. It is a great satisfaction to us to call the attention of the trade and general public to the history and success of their business.

The business was established by W. A. Megraw & Co. in 1850, and was succeeded by Rennous, Kleinle & Co. in 1876, Messrs. John R. Rennous and Wm. Kleinle composing the firm, which met with great success, especially between 1880 and 1890, and became one of the leading brush manufacturers in the United States. It was during this time that the merits of black Chinese bristle were exploited by this firm. The firm built up a large trade in the introduction of Chinese bristle in the manufacture of brushes, and the exceptionally fine line of goods placed on the market at this time gave an impetus to the business which has resulted in placing this concern in the front rank as brush manufacturers in the United States. Rennous, Kleinle & Co. were the pioneers in the use of Chinese bristle and practically for many years had little competition, as the process of preparing the bristle was unknown to their competitors, who were consequently slow to enter into the manufacture of this line of goods.

HOME OF RENNOUS, KLEINLE & COMPANY

The business continued to increase by rapid strides until 1886, when larger facilities had to be sought in greatly extended premises for a factory. The three buildings Nos. 413, 415 and 417 Exchange Place were secured, where the business was successfully carried on until the great fire of 1904. The concern, which had previous to the fire been incorporated, purchased the large property now occupied by the company at 848 to 856 Frederick Avenue, and 847 to 855 Stafford Street, which is one of the largest and best equipped brush plants in this country.

The company make all kind of brushes which are known as the "Horse Shoe Brand," various lines being designated under their trade-marks, "Mikado," "Tycoon," "Arkaco," "Czar" and "Czarina," which names are synonyms for superiority and durability.

The company is represented by a large staff of traveling salesmen and agents, who cover this entire country, Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico and Australia.

The officers of the company are: Mr. W. P. Bigelow, President; Mr. Edw. Pitcairn, Treasurer; Mr. E. H. Welbourn, Superintendent, and Mr. F. A. Pilling, Secretary.

WILLIAM A. TOTTLE & COMPANY

Manufacturers of

120-124 HANOVER STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

The firm of William A. Tottle & Company was established in 1884 by Mr. William A. Tottle, since which time his son, Mr. Morton P. Tottle, has been taken into the firm.

William A. Tottle & Company are large manufacturers of brushes and are selling their product, which consists in part of the following: flat and round paints, flat and oval varnish, whitewash, sweeping and dusting brushes, and a full line of artist goods, in all parts of the country. They are also exporters.

The above company has a large, up-to-date plant and salesroom, which are well adapted to its increasing business.

The integrity which has characterized the policy of this firm has won for it a high standing, not only here but throughout the entire country.

We are also members of the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association.

Our business began in the building to the extreme left, as shown in cut, but owing to increasing needs we have taken in the two adjoining warehouses.

Established Thirty-five Years

J. J. HAINES & CO.

Wholesale Wooden and Willow Warehouse

NUMBER 31 HOPKINS PLACE
BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm is one of the largest of its kind in the East, occupying a structure which extends two hundred and forty-one feet from Hopkins Place to Sutton Street, and has a floor space of not less than forty thousand feet. J. J. Haines & Company are direct importers of china, Japan matting, manufacturers and wholesale dealers in cedar ware, cordage, brushes, brooms, mats, baskets, paper, sieves, twines, flasks, carpets, floor oilcloths, linoleums, etc.

This business was established in 1874 by Mr. J. J. Haines, who came here from Upper-ville, Fauquier County, Va., where he had kept a general store, and founded the firm of Haines & Small. Operations were commenced at 24 South Howard Street, and from the beginning the enterprise prospered. In 1878 Mr. E. D. Robinson was admitted as a partner, the firm being changed to Haines, Small & Robinson. Four years later the other two partners bought out Mr. Small and the firm became Haines & Robinson. After another four years, in 1886, Mr. Robinson retired and a further alteration of the name took place, the device being J. J. Haines & Co. In 1891 Mr. H. L. Haines, a son of the founder, was admitted as a partner, and in 1900 Mr. J. J. Haines retired, turning the business over to the son and Messrs. C. T. Marston. The old name was retained, and the house is still known as J. J. Haines & Company.

The goods of the firm have a fine reputation for reliability and its renown has been built up by rigid integrity and fair dealing. Its trade extends from Pennsylvania to Texas.

Mr. H. L. Haines is the buyer of the general woodenware, giving every detail of this work his close, personal attention and keeping closely in touch with the trend of the trade. Mr. Marston buys all the floor coverings carried.

spot-cash house, and while its mission is to perform a service to the eastern locality, it will not begin its career without the kindest of feelings and respect to all men either in the commercial or professional world.

The promoter of this proposition, Mr. PETER J. SCULLY, really desires to use this opportunity to pay a personal tribute to a people to whom this book is dedicated rather than to advertise; his associations with the Hebrews of this community have been extensive both in a commercial and social way, and he desires to pay an humble tribute to them for the great part they have played in the different walks of life in the world generally.

H. FRIEDMAN

232 AND 234 NORTH GILMOR STREET

Mr. Friedman began business on his own account at 504 Smallwood Street. His growth was very rapid, and he now occupies the double houses known as 232 and 234 North Gilmor Street. Mr. Friedman's reputation as a Ladies' Tailor of high order needs no higher testimony than the statement that he turns out seventy-five suits and upwards per week.

Mr. Friedman was born in Galicia, Austria, July, 1879, and came to this country in 1895, where he received his education. In 1896 he began business on his own account in a small way on Smallwood Street and now ranks as one of the Leading Ladies' Tailors in Baltimore City, having in his employ forty people.

JENKINS & JENKINS, Inc.

Manufacturing and Retail

Silversmiths

216 NORTH CHARLES ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm needs no introduction to Baltimoreans. Located at 216 North Charles Street, their establishment is a Mecca for Fastidious Buyers of Silverware—the kind that has all the substantial character of the ware our grandparents loved; besides possessing a charm of design and excellence of finish all its own. Jenkins & Jenkins are “makers and retailers” of silverware that fulfils every essential requirement.

S. GINSBERG

LADIES' TAILOR AND IMPORTER

419 NORTH CHARLES STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Telephone Communication, Mt. Vernon, 3827 Y

Mr. Ginsberg established at the above address in 1910, backed by an experience in the ladies' tailoring field of fifteen years, during which time engaged high-class patronage for nine years with Mme. Glyder, and also with the well-known house of Isaac Hamburger & Sons—with the latter house he was fitter in the ladies' tailoring department.

Mr. Ginsberg was born in Riga, Russia, thirty-two years ago and came to Baltimore twenty-two years ago, and to-day enjoys a large clientele of Baltimore's best people.

This establishment is complete in every detail and the most exclusive European models and fabrics are on display.

WASHINGTON SANITARIUM

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST

TAKOMA PARK, D. C.

THE LOCATION—Beautifully situated in Takoma Park, one of Washington's most attractive suburbs, amid thickly wooded surroundings and attractive walks, on a bluff overlooking the Sligo, a famous, rippling stream.

THE BUILDING—Imposing in appearance, and of modern fireproof and sanitary construction throughout.

FACILITIES—Treatment rooms are thoroughly equipped with modern appliances, and all physiological healing agencies of recognized value are used, including the various applications of hydrotherapy, phototherapy, massage, electricity, etc.

THE DIET—Each patient is carefully advised by a physician as to the choice and combination of foods. More healthful substitutes replace tea, coffee and flesh meats. Reforms in eating are made so pleasantly that the patient soon loses the desire for harmful foods.

EDUCATION—Instructive and interesting health lectures are given by the physicians; also instruction in scientific cookery, physical culture exercises and drills. The aim is to teach patients how to keep well after they return home.

THE LIFE—The Sanitarium has a corps of Christian nurses and attendants who render cheerful service to patients. The atmosphere of harmony, "good will" and home comfort that prevails causes patients soon to forget their illness as they find themselves members of a happy family.

Correspondence is Invited.

DR. FRANK M. KELLER

Graduate of the University of Pennsylvania

Veterinarian

HOSPITAL AND OFFICE

NUMBERS 404-6-8 NORTH CASTLE STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

ENTRANCE TO THE HOSPITAL ON CASTLE STREET

This business was established by Dr. Keller in 1906, and the Keller Veterinary Hospital is an "L"-shaped structure—two-story brick, 40x50x74 feet—fully equipped with all the latest appliances for the scientific treatment of animals. The hospital is sanitary throughout, and the seventeen stalls are very seldom unoccupied. A special feature of Dr. Keller's practice is the care of dogs and cats, which are boarded by day, week or month and every care given them.

The local 'phone number is C. & P. Wolfe 1087, and calls are promptly responded to during all hours of the day or night.

Dr. Keller is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and is ranked among the expert veterinarians of the East, as attested by the large patronage he enjoys.

L. RUBENSTEIN

"The Different Ladies' Tailor"

L. RUBENSTEIN, Designer

1531 WEST LEXINGTON STREET

Two Doors from Gilmer Street

BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was founded January 1, 1910, and is owned by L. Rubenstein. Mr. Rubenstein has been identified with the manufacturing of Ladies' and Misses' Suits under the firm name of Rubenstein & Brookman, at 312 West Baltimore Street.

On the interior finishing of a ladies' garment depends the permanence of the fit. Mr. Rubenstein personally superintends every minute stitch—every tailoring detail in the garment being made so that the frequent loose, baggy effect is forestalled and the garment insured to retain its shape. All the latest English Imported and Domestic Fabrics are shown, and at prices astonishingly low.

JOHN F. WIESSNER & SONS BREWING COMPANY

1700 NORTH GAY STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

This renowned brewery was established in 1863 by John F. Wiessner, on the same spot now occupied by the magnificent structures which have grown out of the business begun nearly fifty years ago. The company now trades as John F. Wiessner & Sons Brewing Company, which was incorporated 1891, of which Mr. George F. Wiessner is president and treasurer, and Mr. Henry F. Wiessner vice-president and secretary. The product of this brewery ranks with that of the leading breweries of the country. The offices are at 1700 and 1702 N. Gay Street, and the bottling department 1702 to 1710 N. Gay Street, where the "Superlative Beers" of the Wiessner Brewery are bottled for hotel and family use. That the policy inaugurated by the father has been maintained by the sons is shown by the present high standing and the increasing prosperity of this famous brewery.

OLD LLOYD STREET SYNAGOGUE,
(CHIZUK EMUNAH CONG.)

THE WESTERN MARYLAND RAILWAY COMPANY

"The Road of a Thousand Beauties"

The Western Maryland Railroad was chartered in 1852, and, although only recently freed from a receivership, into which it went in March, 1908, is to-day enjoying the highest degree of prosperity, and occupies the unique position of a road rebuilt, the receivership having brought order out of chaos. From an humble beginning the Western Maryland Railroad has developed into a great system, which ere long will become a section of an important trunk line between Baltimore and the Pacific Coast. The line of the road traverses three States—Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia—through a section of America marked by the most glorious scenery and noted for its surpassing natural resources. The Blue Ridge and Alleghany are among the noblest mountain ranges in the United States; in the summer ranking among the country's most favored resorts by reason of the superb climatic condition and vacation advantages. The region is dotted with splendid hostelries and home-like cottages, which are patronized by thousands of summer residents seeking sure relief, which is to be found among these enjoyable hills, from the heat and oppression of crowded cities. Pen Mar and Gettysburg, both on the line of this road, offer opportunities for excursional recreation full of historical interest to thousands of visitors during the summer and fall. The ever-growing appreciations by the public of the advantages to be found in the territory covered by this road is shown by the enormous increase in traffic. Pen Mar is an ideal summer resort situated on the crest of the Blue Ridge Range, where every amusement and diversion is provided; while Gettysburg is too well and favorably known, as the scene of one of the world's greatest battles, to need further comment here. The equipment of the Western Maryland Railway is of the latest and most approved type, maintaining the most powerful mountain-climbing engines and running handsome vestibule coaches, with observation, parlor and buffet cars connected with each train. It is the scenic road of America with a thousand beauties to fascinate the picturesque eye.

WASHINGTON-SUNSET ROUTE

SANTA BARBARA MISSION

The Washington-Sunset Route began to be aggressively exploited as a tourist route to and from the Pacific Coast in September, 1895. From that time on every measure has been adopted to attract and satisfy the traveling public from a point of service and equipment.

Starting from Boston, nineteen States and Territories are traversed before Los Angeles or San Francisco is reached—a rich opportunity, indeed, to study, from actual observation, the distinctive features of commerce, agriculture, manufacture, flora, climate, topography and all manner of places and peoples, in the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, Old Mexico, Arizona and California. There are stop-over privileges permitted en route, which make these opportunities especially enticing.

Standard sleeping cars are operated from New York to New Orleans and from New Orleans to San Francisco; and tourist sleeping cars are operated from Washington to San Francisco without change, constituting the longest run in the world for any cars in regular service; and a particularly pleasing feature of this tourist sleeping car service is that the same conductor and porter go through with the car without change, thus adding largely to the comfort and pleasure of the passengers. These features have been prime factors in building up this Tourist Car Line from one car a week to four cars per week.

Many people in the East who have not traveled in the tourist cars of the Washington-Sunset Route do not appreciate the extreme superiority of these cars.

The offices of the Washington-Sunset Route are conveniently accessible to the traveling public at 170 and 228 Washington Street, Boston; No. 1, 366, 1158 and 1200 Broadway, New York; 632 and 828 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia; 119 East Baltimore Street and 29 West Baltimore Street, Baltimore; 705 15th Street and 905 F Street, Washington.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD

Founders: Geo. Brown (1787-1859), Benj. C. Howard (1791-1872), Alexander Bridge (1766-1839), Talbot Jones (1770-1834), Philip E. Thomas (1776-1861), Wm. Patterson (1752-1835), Robert Oliver (1757-1834), Chas. Carroll, of Carrollton (1737-1832), Alexander Brown (1764-1834), J. V. L. McMahon (1800-1871), Chas. F. Mayer, Sr. (1791-1864), Fielding Lucas (1782-1854), W. G. McNeill (1800-1853), Isaac McKim (1775-1838), Benj. H. Latrobe (1806-1878), Peter Cooper (1791-1883), Sam'l F. B. Morse (1791-1872), Louis McLane (1784-1857), Chauncey Brooks (1794-1880), Wm. G. Harrison (1803-1883), Thos. C. Jenkins (1802-1881), Thos. Swann (1809-1883), Johns Hopkins (1795-1873), Albert Schumacher (1802-1871), John B. Morris (1785-1874), John Garrett (1820-1884), John H. B. Latrobe (1803-1891).

The history of the First Railroad in America began with an act of incorporation granted by the State of Maryland February 28, 1821, and confirmed by the State of Virginia March 8, 1828. The construction of the road was commenced July 4, 1828, and at the laying of the "First Stone," Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, cast the first spadeful of earth, saying: "I consider this among the most important acts of my life, second only to that of signing the Declaration of Independence, if indeed second to that."

Originally it extended from Baltimore to Ellicott Mills, a distance of fifteen miles, then to Frederick, sixty-one miles. Relays of horses were first used as motive power, followed by sail-cars. The stone freight-house at Frederick is the oldest freight-house in the world. In August, 1830, steam was introduced, and Peter Cooper, with his crude engine, hauled the first train.

The first locomotive built in America was Peter Cooper's "Tom Thumb," which was successfully run on the B. & O. Railroad; then followed the "Davis Grasshopper," designed by Phineas Davis in 1832; then by "Winan's Camel-back" in 1848; after this, in 1852, came the "Hayes Dutch Wagon," designed for hauling passenger trains. Crude sleepers were introduced in 1848. The next extension of the road was from Relay to Washington, thence to Harper's Ferry, to Cumberland, across the Allegheny Mountains to Wheeling, and finally from Cumberland to Pittsburg and Chicago. The first through train was run in 1857 to St. Louis.

When the Civil War broke out the eyes of the whole nation were constantly on the line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, because of its strategic importance and the part it was compelled to play in the fierce struggle. The entire line from Parkersburg and Wheeling, W. Va., to Point of Rocks, Md., during the Civil War was debatable ground, over which the contending hosts marched and fought. Many of the famous battles of the Civil War were fought along or adjacent to the line of the B. & O. Railroad, viz.: At Harper's Ferry, Antietam, South Mountain, Gettysburg, Monocacy, and in all one hundred and eighty battles were fought, from 1861 to 1865, on or near this historic road.

It was the first railroad in America—first to obtain a charter and the only existing railroad bearing without change its original charter name; first to be operated for passengers or freight; first to utilize locomotive power; first to penetrate the Allegheny Mountains; first to employ electricity as a means of communication. It had the first telegraph line in the world, and over which Prof. S. F. B. Morse sent his first message, "What hath God wrought," from Baltimore to Washington in 1844. First to employ electricity as a motive power. It has a fully equipped electric power plant of its own in Baltimore, which supplies current for the operation of several of the most immense passenger stations, all freight terminals, warehouses, shops and water front.

What must be the impression of the thousands living to-day who traveled in the old style of car and who have since enjoyed a journey between Washington and New York in the palatial "Royal Limited," or indeed, on any of the "Royal Blue" trains!

PENNSYLVANIA R.R. STATION

In the Heart of New York's Social and Business Activities

The Pennsylvania Station in New York City fronts directly on Seventh Avenue, Thirty-first Street, Thirty-third Street, Eighth Avenue opposite the new United States Post Office, and on Thirty-fourth Street by special plaza. It has exits and entrances on all four fronts. The main entrance is at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-second Street, which leads directly to Broadway, Fifth Avenue, Madison Avenue, Park Avenue and Lexington Avenue. This entrance is one block from Broadway, two blocks from Fifth Avenue, and by way of Thirty-third Street one block from the busiest spot in the city's centre.

Travel to the "downtown" section of the city will also be provided for by trains from the transfer station at Harrison, near Newark, by way of the Hudson & Manhattan tubes from Jersey City to the Hudson Terminal at Cortlandt and Church Streets, which is the heart of the financial district as well as of a section where all the big industrial and manufacturing corporations have their business offices. The ferries between Jersey City and Cortlandt and Desbrosses Streets will be continued in operation.

The location of the station appeals directly to the hotel guest, the shopper, the amusement seeker, the business man, the professional man, and every class of travelers to and from New York over the Pennsylvania Railroad.

REV. ALOIS KAISER

Born November 10, 1840
Died January 3, 1908

WILLIAM SOLOMON RAYNER

Merchant and financier; born in Oberelsbach, Bavaria, September 23, 1822; died in Baltimore, Md., March 1, 1899. In 1840 he removed to the United States. Declining an offer of the position of religious teacher in the old Henry Street Synagogue, New York, he removed to Baltimore, and entered upon a successful mercantile career. At the close of the Civil War he became one of the chief figures in the financial development of Baltimore, serving for many years on the directorates of the Western National Bank, the Baltimore Equitable Society and the Western Maryland Railroad.

William S. Rayner was well versed in German and Hebrew and materially assisted the famous Rabbi Einhorn in the translation of the first German prayer-book used in Baltimore. As an illustration of his scholarly ability, when Bayard Taylor's translation of "Faust" appeared Rayner suggested an important change in the text of the first edition. Sending the corrected copy to Mr. Taylor, the distinguished author sent in return a written acknowledgment of the valuable assistance thus rendered him, and in the edition of 1898 the change was made. As a matter of historical interest we give the letter written by Bayard Taylor to Mr. Rayner:

142 EAST EIGHTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK.

January 7, 1876.

DEAR SIR:

I thank you for calling my attention to the line you quote. My translation is undoubtedly incorrect. As it was written nearly six years ago, I cannot recall what cause led me to translate Herr as "God" instead of "lord" or "master," but I was probably misled by one of the many commentaries which I then studied, in order to acquaint myself with all varieties of interpretation. I shall change the line in the next edition. I have been too much occupied, of late years, to give the work a thorough examination, line by line, but I fully intend to do so.

Very truly yours,

BAYARD TAYLOR.

He was instrumental in organizing the Har Sinai Verein, which soon after became the Har Sinai Congregation, and of which he was for many years the president. He was a strong advocate of reform, and it was mainly through his influence that David Einhorn became rabbi of this congregation (1855). Being one of the pioneers of the movement in favor of Sunday services in the Reformed Hebrew churches, he warmly advocated them in inspiring addresses and communications to the religious and secular press. That Mr. Rayner's idea was correct is shown by the fact that the Sunday-service movement has generally grown among American Jews, notably in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit and many other cities. In Baltimore the services have since been held without interruption from the time of his advocacy of them.

He was one of the founders of the Baltimore Hebrew Orphan Asylum, donating its first building and grounds, the first president of the Baltimore Hebrew Benevolent Society under its present State charter and represented the City of Baltimore for many years in the management of the House of Refuge, served as a vice-president of the Baltimore Poor Association, and was one of the managers of the Home for Incurables. During the Civil War he was very active in the formation of the Union Relief Association, and was one of its first vice-presidents. In 1844 he married Amalie Jacobson. Of this union four children survive; two of them, in memory of their father, endowed a fellowship in Semitics in the Johns Hopkins University; the eldest son, Isidor Rayner, was elected in 1904 to the United States Senate.

THE FALCONER COMPANY

Bank and Commercial
Stationers, Printing, Lithographing and Blank-
Book Making

N. W. CORNER GAY AND WATER STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

Established in 1849, The Falconer Company, Bank and Commercial Stationers, has built up a reputation second to none in the country. Originally at 204 Water Street, since 1904 it has been located at 5 and 7 North Gay Street, where are situated the office and factory. Owing to the great demand for its products from all sections of the country, the business has grown to such an extent that these quarters are entirely inadequate. Early in the year 1910 a large lot, fronting 80 feet on South Gay Street and 125 feet on Water Street, facing the National Marine Bank and directly opposite the new United States Custom House, was purchased from the Savings Bank of Baltimore, whose business for many years prior to the fire was conducted on this site. A stately factory building of steel, concrete and brick, absolutely fireproof, with an abundance of light, is now being erected. This is to be equipped with the most modern machinery for the production of all processes of printing, lithographing and blank-book making, for which the Company has gained a reputation for the highest grade of work. Their capacity will be threefold what it is at present, but so rapid is the increase in their business, due to putting forth nothing but goods of the highest quality, that it is expected every foot of space will, before long, be required. While their specialty is supplies of every description for banks, they also enjoy quite a large trade in commercial stationery with corporations and firms in every kind of business. This great enterprise has been built up by fair dealing, unvarying courtesy and a thorough understanding of all that is required to manufacture goods of the highest quality and deliver them in proper condition exactly when wanted. A large number of skilled operators are kept busy the entire year by a corps of genial and well-posted traveling salesmen, who cover the fifteen States immediately surrounding Baltimore on the south, west and north. The policy of the Company is to be right up to the minute, and the processes employed in their factory are at all times the very latest. So attractive is their way of doing business that with them the saying "Once a buyer, always a customer" has an absolute truism.

THE COMMERCIAL AND FARMERS NATIONAL BANK

Federal, State and Municipal Depository. Capital $500 000

HOWARD AND GERMAN STS., BALTIMORE, MD.

This ancestral bank was founded in 1810 and has always stood on the original site—the building, however, was slightly improved by extensions and the addition of an extra story. This bank has to its credit an unbroken record of one hundred years of integrity, and during the days of 1812 and up to the present has always stood ready to aid the National Government in any instance. On Tuesday, May 4, 1813, the records show that the directors met and formulated plans for removing all the funds to Fredericktown, Md. (now Frederick, Md.), as a place of safety by reason of the threatened attack on Baltimore by the British—which removal was made, however, more than a year later of $43,000 silver and gold, $63,776 in foreign money and $290,000 in notes of the bank. This removal, however, was made to Westminster, Md., and was the starting of the Union National Bank of that place, now known as Dr. Herring's Bank. February 3, 1815, the Commercial and Farmers Bank notified the United States Government that it was prepared to advance to the Government one-half of the $600,000 direct tax that the Government expected to receive from the State of Maryland, and same date notified the Secretary of the Treasury that they would join with the other banks in Baltimore in raising $1,200,000 as a loan for the defense of Baltimore.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

The Mayor of the City of Baltimore and 400 of its most distinguished mercantile factors have joined in a common act of recognition of the civic integrity and the personal genius of the Jews of Baltimore.

In formulating the "History of the Jews of Baltimore" the question arose whether it should be strictly a class book confined solely to a review of the work of the Jews of Baltimore, from a Jewish estimate, or whether the class idea should be laid aside and the tribute come from without—a tribute from Baltimore as a whole to its Jewish citizens as a part.

The latter policy has been adopted for the reason that under the other policy the Jew, in self-recording his relations to Baltimore's development, would appear as simply testifying of himself, which might be construed as mere vanity; whereas by allowing the tribute to come from all classes of his fellow-citizens, the idea of self-laudation is forever eliminated. Under the one phase it would be glory inferred—under the other it is honor conferred.

The "History of the Jews of Baltimore" needs no defense from within, because it is justified from without; as testified by the esteem, which the magnificent patronage of the book evidences, as a recognition, by all classes of men, of the important part played by their Jewish fellow citizens in Baltimore's Financial, Commercial, Manufactural and Educational development.

It can be with pride only that posterity will look into this book at distant times and find recorded there the life data of ancestors long since passed to their great reward—and to note with exalted pleasure the distinguished position occupied not only individually, but collectively, by the Jews of Baltimore in the year of nineteen hundred and ten.

If there are any omitted from this record, it is rather because of the indifference of the living to historical opportunities, than to inefficient effort of the publishers to accomplish the legitimate end to which this work has been directed. As an historical ark, we feel it will preserve much of vital data, that otherwise could have been forever lost in the waters of temporal oblivion.

There is no precaution which can preserve to future generations the wealth which to-day's genius so zealously accumulates; far surer inheritance, indeed, is the properly preserved record of a good name, which time cannot diminish nor fortune imperil.

THE R. M. SUTTON CO.

Importers and Jobbers of Dry Goods and Notions

LIBERTY AND LOMBARD STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The business was established in 1866, in a much smaller way, under the firm name of Weedon, Johnson & Co. In 1869 it was changed to Johnson, Sutton & Co. In 1890 it was changed to R. M. Sutton & Co., and in 1904 it became incorporated as The R. M. Sutton Co., with R. M. Sutton, president; Thomas Todd, vice-president and treasurer; John R. Sutton, vice-president; E. K. Patterson, vice-president, and Wm. F. Sutton, secretary.

The building occupied by the company is located on the corner of Liberty and Lombard Streets, and is of nine stories, with a total floor space of 144,000 square feet.

It employs fifty traveling salesmen, and sells from Pennsylvania to the Gulf and to the Mississippi River.

At the death of Mr. R. M. Sutton, his son, John R. Sutton, was elected president.

J. BARRY MAHOOL
MAYOR

Mayor's Office,

BALTIMORE, Md. April 28, 1909.

The Historical Review Society,
Baltimore, Md.

Gentlemen:-

It is with great pleasure that I note the effort being made to properly record the work and achievements of the Jewish people of Baltimore.

There is every reason why this record should be kept. Our Jewish citizens have much of which to feel intensely proud. I know, from my own experience, that they have been wonderful factors in the task of building and developing our city. Their magnificent enterprise and public spirit have been exhibited on many and important occasions. I have found them energetic laborers in every field of commendable effort. I have never called for aid in any worthy direction but what they have responded heartily and effectively. Nor is that strange when we recall some of the splendid personalities who are found in their circle of leaders. Big brains and big hearts are plentiful, - for which reason they have played a conspicuous part in our commercial and philanthropic and political history.

I congratulate our Jewish people upon what they are and what they have accomplished in our midst. They are a valuable and cherished portion of our people: and I wish them a continuance of their loyalty to Baltimore and to Baltimore's interests.

Very truly yours,

Mayor

THE JEWS OF BALTIMORE: A HISTORICAL SKETCH

BY ISIDOR BLUM

The date of the first settlement of Jews in Baltimore cannot be determined. There were no Jews among the men who bought lots when Baltimore Town was laid out in 1729-30. Isaac Markens, in his "Hebrews in America," tells us that in 1756, Jacob Myers erected an inn at the southeast corner of Gay and Market (Baltimore) Streets; but, even if this inn-keeper is not the same Jacob Myers who was a few years later an elder in the First German Reformed Congregation, it is highly improbable that he was a Jew. Markens could have relied more safely upon the Hebrew name of Benjamin Levy, who advertises in the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser of December 9, 1773, that he "has just opened store in Market Street, at the corner of Calvert Street, where he sells, wholesale and retail, for ready money only," a large number and variety of articles, including liquors, spices, drugs, foodstuffs and drygoods. In 1776 Benjamin Levy was one of a number of men authorized by Congress to sign bills of credit or money. Jacob Hart, the father-in-law of Haym M. Salomon, headed a subscription in 1781 for a loan to General Lafayette; Nathaniel Levy served under Lafayette in the "First Baltimore Cavalry." It is almost certain that there was no Jewish community in Baltimore at the time of the Revolution. All that may be inferred from our fragmentary knowledge is the presence of a few sporadic settlers.

The first Jews in Baltimore of whom we know anything besides their names are the Ettings. Elijah Etting, born in 1724 at Frankfort-on-the-Main, came to America in 1758, and in the following year married Shinah Solomon, the daughter of a London merchant who had settled in Lancaster, Pa. After her husband's death, Shinah Etting is said to have come to Baltimore with five of her children, and to have kept a boarding house on Market (now Baltimore) Street, near Calvert. Her grandson wrote the following account of what he calls the "Oldest Jewish Family in Maryland":

"Shinah Etting (grandmother), widow of Elijah Etting, removed to Baltimore, Md., from York Town, Pa., in the month of September, 1780, two years after the death of her husband, and with her family resided at Mr. Joseph Donaldson's (on corner of Market and Gay Streets) until a house was built for her by Jas. Edwards, situated in Gay Street, opposite Gerard Hopkins's (now General Ridgeley's), to which she removed in 1782. Solomon Etting came to Baltimore from York in 1789 [at the age of twenty-five], and commenced the hardware business in a store on South Calvert Street, below Lovely Lane, after which he removed to corner of Lovely Lane and Calvert Street, where he pursued the same business until the years 1805-06, when he purchased a house on Market Street, between Howard and Eutaw Streets (owned and built by Jas. West), where he removed to (then engaged in a general shipping and commercial business) and in which house he resided until May, 1811, when he purchased the house on West Lexington Street, No. 4 Pascault Row, where he resided until the time of his death, August 6, 1847. In 1790 Isaac Solomon (the brother of Shinah Etting) arrived in Baltimore from St. Eustated [St. Eustatius?] and commenced the hardware business in a store on Market Street, some four or five doors below Calvert Street. Levi, a brother of Isaac, joined him in business a few days after. Myer Solomon, the eldest brother, came to Baltimore from Lancaster, Pa., in 1793, purchased a house (on Market Street, a few doors below Calvert Street) from Henry Wilson, and commenced the drygoods trade."

Isaac Solomon must have been in Baltimore before 1790. In 1782 he advertises in the newspaper the furniture and metal ware which he offers for sale in his "iron-mongery store" on Gay Street.

Running north from Monument Street, between Ensor Street and Harford Avenue, there is a blind alley, which bore until recently the name of Jew Alley,

The First Jewish Cemetery.

A hundred feet north of Monument Street, a lane called Abraham Street connects Jew Alley with Harford Avenue. On this little block was the first Jewish cemetery in Baltimore. In 1801 it was conveyed from Charles Carroll, William McMechen, and John Leggett to Solomon Etting and Levi Solomon. But the plot of ground was used as a cemetery, or set aside for burial purposes, at least fifteen years earlier. "The Jews' Burying Ground" is one of the items on a document dated 1786 and headed "Mr. Carroll's Claims." The last interment was made here in 1832. Part of the cemetery ground was later covered by a shanty or shed used as a negro church; a few years ago this was torn down to make way for a brewery.

Reuben and Solomon Etting soon became active citizens of Baltimore. When the "Independent Blues" reorganized in 1798, in expectation of a war with France, Reuben and Solomon Etting.

Reuben Etting, who had been their lieutenant, was elected captain of the company. President Jefferson appointed him United States Marshal for Maryland. In 1792, at a meeting of the citizens of Baltimore, Solomon Etting was appointed on a committee to forward resolutions to President Washington expressing disapproval of the proposed (Jay's) treaty with Great Britain. He was one of the organizers in 1796, and for many years a director, of the Union Bank; and he was a member of the first board of directors of the Baltimore Water Company, which he helped to organize in 1805. He was a street commissioner in 1816, and in 1828 a director of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. In 1826 he was elected to the City Council.

In 1796 the stockholders of the Union Bank included Solomon and Reuben Etting, their mother, Shinah Etting, and their sisters, Kitty and Hetty; their uncles, Levy and Myer Solomon; and Jacob F., Philadelphia, Benjamin, and Hetty Levy. The first "Baltimore Town and Fells' Town Directory," published in the same year, contains, in addition to some of those that have been mentioned, the names of Philip Itzehkin, one Kahn, Benjamin Lyon, Solomon Raphael, and seven men bearing the name of Jacobs, including Moses, Samuel, and Joseph Jacobs. In the list of letters remaining at the post-office in this year occur the names of Benjamin Myers and Hheym Levenstene, the latter being perhaps the Livingston whose family name is given in the directory. The Jewish population of Baltimore in 1796 has been estimated at fifteen families.

Jews in Baltimore in 1796.

Two years later, Levi Kalmus (Collmus), a youth of fifteen, came to Baltimore from Bohemia. Levi and Jacob Block were here in 1803. In 1812 Zalma Réhiné (1757-1843), a native of Westphalia, came to Baltimore from Richmond, where he had been one of the first members of the Congregation Beth Shalome. Réhiné died in 1843, at the age of eighty-six years.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions and activities. It emphasizes that this is crucial for ensuring transparency and accountability in the organization's operations.

2. The second part outlines the various methods and tools used to collect and analyze data. It mentions the use of surveys, interviews, and focus groups to gather qualitative information, as well as the application of statistical software for quantitative analysis.

3. The third part describes the process of identifying trends and patterns in the data. It highlights the need for a systematic approach to data analysis, involving the use of charts, graphs, and other visual aids to make the information more accessible and understandable.

4. The fourth part discusses the importance of communication and reporting. It stresses that the findings of the research must be clearly and concisely presented to the relevant stakeholders, using appropriate language and formats to ensure that the information is effectively conveyed.

5. The fifth part concludes the document by summarizing the key points and providing a final statement on the overall findings and recommendations. It reiterates the importance of ongoing monitoring and evaluation to ensure that the organization remains effective and efficient in its operations.

A number of Jews aided in the defence of Fort McHenry, including Philip I. Cohen, Mendes I. Cohen, Samuel Etting, Levi Collmus, Jacob Moses, Samuel Cohen, and many others.

Under its constitution of 1776, Maryland, renowned for religious tolerance, required all who held office under the State government to subscribe to a declaration of belief in the Christian religion. In December, 1797, Solomon Etting and Barnard Gratz petitioned the General Assembly that Jews might "be placed on the same footing with other good citizens." The petition was read, but a committee to which it was referred reported on the same day that they "have taken the same into consideration and conceive the prayer of the petition is reasonable; but as it involves a constitutional question of considerable importance, they submit to the House the propriety of taking the same into consideration at this advanced stage of the session." Five years later a petition from "the sect of people called Jews," stating "that they are deprived of holding any office of profit or trust under the constitution and laws of this State," was refused by a vote of 38 to 17. When a new bill was introduced at the session of 1803, consideration of the question was deferred; when it was re-introduced at the following session, the bill was again defeated, though by a slightly smaller majority than in 1802. It was fourteen years before the Jews again demanded the removal of their civil disability.

In this period a number of Jews settled in Baltimore. The most notable of the new settlers were the members of the Cohen family. Jacob I. Cohen, a native of Rhenish Prussia, had come to America in 1773, and, after residing in Lancaster, Pa., and in Charleston, S. C., had finally settled in Richmond, Va., where he was one of the early members of the Beth Shalome Congregation. After the war he was joined by his brother Israel I. Cohen, who married Judith Solomon, of Bristol, England. In 1808, after the death of Israel I. Cohen, his widow removed to Baltimore with her daughter Maria I. Cohen and her six sons—Jacob I. Cohen, Jr., Philip I., Mendes I., Benjamin I., David I., and Joshua I. Cohen. The eldest son was the founder of the firm of Jacob I. Cohen, Jr., and Brothers, Bankers, which acquired a national reputation for strength and integrity. When the religious test was eventually removed, he was elected to the City Council, and, after serving several terms, chosen president of the First Branch. For five successive years he was one of the Commissioners of Finance of the city of Baltimore. He was one of the founders of Baltimore's public school system, and continued for many years the first treasurer of the school board. He was a director of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the first president of the railroad leading to Philadelphia, and held other offices of honor and trust. Joshua I. Cohen was an eminent physician. Many of the Egyptian antiquities in the Cohen collection of the Johns Hopkins University were collected by Col. Mendes I. Cohen in the Nile Valley. All of the Cohen brothers were distinguished citizens of Baltimore.

The elder Jacob I. Cohen served in the Revolution, and later, as a banker, rendered valuable services to his adopted country. In Richmond he was "conspicuous in all municipal movements, being chosen a magistrate and member of the City Council." Barnard and Michael Gratz, the former the father-in-law of Solomon Etting, were among the signers of the Philadelphia Non-Importation Resolutions of 1765, having taken a leading part in this "First Declaration of Independence." The nephews of the elder Jacob I. Cohen, and Samuel Etting, the grandson of Barnard Gratz, had aided in the defense of Baltimore, but they could hold no office under its government. Reuben Etting had been appointed Federal Marshal for Maryland, but his religion debarred him from the office of constable.

For the Cohens and the Ettings, who occupied high positions in commercial and public life, their civil disabilities must have been especially irksome; and Solomon Etting and Jacob I. Cohen, Jr., engaged in a determined and sustained effort to have the religious test abolished, Jacob I. Cohen, Jr., being the author of the successive petitions for relief and the proposed constitutional amendments that besieged every session of the Legislature from 1818 to 1825. The prestige of these leaders and the righteousness of their cause enlisted the sympathy and active aid of a group of men prominent in public affairs: Thomas Kennedy, Thomas Brackenridge, E. S. Thomas, General Winder, W. G. Worthington, and John V. L. McMahon. The "Jew Bill" attracted attention and favorable comment throughout the country, and was an issue in Maryland politics until, in 1825 and 1826, an act for the relief of the Jews of Maryland provided that "every citizen of this State professing the Jewish religion who shall be appointed to any office of profit or trust shall, in addition to the required oaths, make and subscribe to a belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, instead of the declaration now required by the State."

The Jews in Baltimore probably managed to hold religious services as soon as they were sufficiently numerous. The first regular meeting for divine worship which we have certain knowledge was held in the autumn of 1829, in the home of Zalma Réhiné, on Holliday Street, near Pleasant. Among the men who attended these services were Zalma Réhiné, John M. Dyer, Moses Millem, Lewis Silver, Levi Benjamin, Joseph Osterman, Joseph Ancker, Levy Collmus, Tobias Myers and Jacob Aaron.

This minyán must have been the nucleus of the Congregation Nidche Israel, better known as the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. In December, 1829, the Legislature was presented with a memorial in which "sundry citizens of the city of Baltimore" prayed that they might be incorporated under the name and style of "the scattered Israelites, for the purpose of building a synagogue." A bill to incorporate the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation was favorably reported, but was rejected by a decisive majority on its second reading. A few days thereafter, however, the vote was reconsidered, and a bill was passed granting the petition of "the scattered Israelites of the city of Baltimore," and incorporating John M. Dyer, Moses Millem, Lewis Silver, Levi Benjamin, and Joseph Osterman as the electors of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation.

The first synagogue in Baltimore was a room over a grocery store at the corner of Bond and Fleet Streets (Fleet Street is now Eastern Avenue). In 1832, when the congregation moved to Exeter Street, near what is now Lexington Street, it had the following members: Jacob Aaron, Joseph Ancker, Levi Benjamin, Simon Block, H. Bowman, Levy Collmus, Joseph Demmelman, Michael De Young, John M. Dyer, Leon Dyer, H. M. C. Elion, Jacob Ezekiel, Jonas Friedenwald, Charles J. Hart, S. Hunt, Gabriel Isaacs, A. Kookegey, W. Marschutz, Orias Mastritz, Moses Millem, Tobias Myers, Wm. Myers, Joseph Osterman, Zalma Réhiné, Aaron Reider, Benjamin Seixas, Lewis Silver, Joseph Simpson, S. Waterman. In 1835, when the congregation occupied a one-story dwelling on High Street, near the bend between Fayette and Gay Streets, the number of members had increased to fifty-five.

Some of these same men were among the organizers of a society known as the "Irishche Chevra," which is said to have held religious services, in 1832, over an inn at the corner of Bond and Fleet Streets. The date of the society's birth is unknown; the earliest documentary evidence of its existence is its charter, whereby the General Assembly of Maryland, on March 4, 1834, incorporated the members of the "United Hebrew Benevolent Society of Baltimore" "for the laudable purpose of affording relief to each other and to their respective families in the event of sickness, distress or death." The men who petitioned for this charter and who were thus incorporated were: Simon Eytinge, Joseph Osterman, Leon Dyer, Jacob Ezekiel, S. I. Block, Joseph Simpson, Levi Flaut, Levi Benjamin, Aaron Reutter, Benjamin Seixas, Leopold Schneeburg, Selig Strupp, H. M. C. Ellion (Elion), Emil Niewiehl, L. Hammerschlag (Hammerschlack), Levi Hess, M. Tobias Meyers, Solomon Benjamin, H. Hein, Wolf Myers, Levi Keothen, Abraham Leon, Lazer Levi, Lewis Myers, Joseph Jacobs, Meyer Hertzburg, A. D. Wachman (Washman), Jonas Baumann, Joseph J. Posnanskie (Posnankie), Isaac Strupp, Julius Kann, John M. Dyer, Solomon Hunt, David Taub, Jacob Aaron, Samuel Muntzer, Michael Heilbrunn, Solomon Carvalho (Carvalho), Joseph Anger, Levi Collmus, Jacob Lieser, Morris A. Cohen, Jonas Friedenwalt (Friedenwalt), S. A. Waterman, Gustavus M. Heinwald, Kritz Kayser, Moses Kayser, Carle Schlectern (Schlecktern).

According to one explanation, the Irish Chevra was named after an Irishwoman who used to sit at the door of the society's meeting-place; some tell us, however, that the organization was really known as the "Iris Chevra." Whatever the etymology of its peculiar name, the Irish Chevra was probably a mutual benefit society, with some social features, and providing especially, no doubt, for the proper burial of its members and "their respective families." It seems to have included in its functions the holding of religious services; after worshipping for a time at the corner of Bond and Fleet Streets, the members met over Schwartz's Matzah bakery on Bond Street. The chevra was continued for half a century, but the later members were less interested in it, and when most of them had died, the society itself succumbed to old age. The United Hebrew Benevolent Society has recently been reorganized for the sole purpose of maintaining the cemetery which Joseph Ancker gave to the society on the condition that it should be forever preserved as a burial ground.

Portuguese Jews, who formed the first stratum of Jewish settlement in most of the American cities in which Jews settled more than a hundred years ago, are conspicuously absent in Baltimore. Practically all the early Jewish immigrants were Dutch or German, some coming directly to Baltimore from Europe, others, especially the earlier settlers, coming from other American cities or from the West Indies. In the thirties there was a considerable immigration of German Jews, which rose to its height in the early forties. Many, perhaps most, of these came from Bavaria.

In 1825, Solomon Etting computed the number of Jews in Maryland to be 150. Miss Henrietta Szold has estimated the Jewish population in 1835 at 300 souls. In an address delivered at the fiftieth anniversary of the Har Sinai Congregation, William S. Rayner said that when he arrived in Baltimore, in 1840, the Jewish population "aggregated less than 200 families," most of which were German. A few, he said, had settled in Baltimore before 1830; most of them had come between 1835 and 1840.

With a few exceptions, the Jews of Baltimore lived together in the eastern section of the city. Most of them were very poor and followed humble callings. One immigrant, for example, who later became a man of means and a prominent Jew and citizen, was absolutely penniless when he came to Baltimore with his family in 1832, and mended umbrellas until he had laid aside enough money to open a little store. Most of the immigrants began to earn a livelihood by shouldering a pack and travelling through the counties of Maryland and Virginia. Usually they spent some time in learning the language and accumulating a little capital; sometimes they accepted the help of friends in stocking a peddler's sack. It was probably the continual absence of many of the members of the Jewish community that precluded the forming of a congregation before 1830. It is said that services were held on Rosh ha-Shanah in 1828, but that a minyan was secured only with great difficulty. Aside from the lack of public divine service, however, the Jews probably conformed with all the laws and usages of orthodox Judaism. Wolf Marschutz was the schochet of the colony, and as early as 1822 Gabriel Isaacs was the mohel.

In 1838 the community had grown large enough to have a second congregation. Finding the location of the synagogue inconvenient, and sufficiently numerous to form a schule of their own, a number of men living in that part of the city which was formerly Fell's Town and is still known as Fell's Point, organized, in this year, the Fell's Point Hebrew Friendship Congregation. It has been said that the congregation was organized by the Irish Chevra, and that it was merely a continuation of the Chevra's schule; but it seems more probable that the Chevra did not, as such, take any part in its formation. Some of its members, however, may have done so; and the Chevra discontinued its religious services when the Fell's Point Congregation erected its synagogue on Eden Street in 1848, if it had not done so even earlier. Because of its name and its location, the Fell's Point Hebrew Friendship Congregation was known colloquially as the "P'int Schule," the older congregation being called the "Stadt Schule."

In these early days there was little difference between those who needed charity and those who gave it, and the fewness and homogeneity of the Jews in Baltimore strengthened the feeling of brotherhood created by common faith and traditions. Soon, however, with an increase in the number of those who needed temporary assistance, and with the rise of an indigent class, the relief problem became more serious.

The board of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation frequently voted relief to some poor stranger, or to some one "who has grown poor in our midst." The records of the congregation contain such items as these: "Owing to the continued illness of ———, his family is in want, and the board donates $5 to that family"; and "A stranger made application to bury his child, and the board, respecting his poverty, agreed not to make any charge." The benevolence of the Irish Chevra, and of other societies that may have existed, doubtless extended beyond their members; but the community required a charitable institution, especially as the Jews have always been unwilling to allow their poor to become a charge upon the community in which they live.

In order to assist the poor systematically, and especially help new immigrants, the United Hebrew Assistance Society was organized in 1846, Leon Dyer being elected president.

Leon Dyer was the son of John M. Dyer, who had been one of the organizers of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation and its first president. He was born in Alzey, Germany, October 9, 1807, and came to Baltimore with his parents in 1812. As a young man, he worked in his father's beef-packing establishment, the first in America. Of large physique and strong personality, he possessed a commanding presence and great executive ability. He was very popular with the citizens of Baltimore, was appointed acting mayor during the bread riots, and held a number of minor public offices. He enlisted in the Texan forces in their struggle for independence, and received a commission as major. He was on General Scott's staff in the Seminole War, and was wounded in the final battle of the campaign against Osceola. In the Mexican War, he was appointed quartermaster-general, with the rank of colonel. Dyer was elected president of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation in 1840, and seven years later, when his health obliged him to leave the city, he was presented with a medal by the Jewish community of Baltimore. He settled in San Francisco, where he founded the first Jewish congregation on the Pacific Coast. He died in 1883, in Louisville, Ky.

Moritz Henry Weil and Louis Hamburger, of Baltimore, served in the Mexican War. A company composed entirely of Jews was formed, with Levi Benjamin as first lieutenant, but it does not seem to have engaged in active service.

With the increase of Baltimore's Jewish population, the congregations grew steadily. A few years after the organization of the "Stadt Schule," Joseph Jacobs became chazan; at first the prayers were doubtless read by different members, for they were all familiar with the orthodox service. Rev. I. Moses was cantor from 1835 to 1844. The congregation changed its quarters frequently; in 1837 it purchased a three-story brick dwelling at the southeast corner of Harrison Street and Etna Lane. Three years later Abraham Rice became its rabbi.

Abraham Rice was born, in 1860, at Gogshcim, near Würzburg, Germany. As a young student he was placed in the care of Rabbi Abraham Bing; later he studied under Rabbi Wolf Hamburger. When he came to America in 1840, Abraham Rice.

Rice declared that it was his mission to re-establish orthodoxy in America. Upon his arrival in New York he was persuaded by friends to go to Newport to reopen the synagogue there, in the hope of re-establishing the Jewish community. Unsuccessful, he returned to New York, where he met Aaron Weglein, a native of Rice's birthplace and president of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. Weglein offered him the leadership of his congregation, and Rice thus became the first rabbi in Baltimore, beginning his ministry on Rosh ha-Shanah of 1840. The congregation could pay him only a small salary, and he kept a little drygoods store, observing thus the rabbinical injunction not to use the Torah as a spade to dig with, and the command to follow a worldly vocation besides studying and teaching the law. Rice was known in Germany and throughout the United States as a learned Talmudist, and was recognized as an authority, questions involving matters of ritual being referred to him for decision. He was a cripple, and is said not to have been particularly eloquent in the pulpit. There are men and women still living, however, who are thrilled by his name, and it is due largely to him that Baltimore was and, to some extent, still is, a stronghold of conservative Judaism. His learning, his sincere piety, his loving and lovable character gave him an influence which has not yet disappeared.

Rice found in Baltimore a fruitful soil for his labors, for the community was almost a unit in its orthodoxy, anxious to conform with every detail of the biblical and rabbinical law.

Almost a unit, but not quite; for in 1842 a number of young men, influenced by the Hamburg Temple Movement, and stimulated in part by an expression of Rice's orthodoxy, formed themselves into the Har Sinai Verein, for the purpose of giving expression to reform doctrines. In October the Verein organized a congregation, the first in America established as a Reform Congregation. Services were held on Rosh ha-Shanah of 1842 in a public hall at what is now the southeast corner of Baltimore Street and Post-Office Avenue. "A number of persons attended, some to take part in the services, some out of curiosity." Their orthodox brethren refusing to lend them a scroll of the law, the members of the Verein had to content themselves with an ordinary copy of the Bible. Joseph Simpson and A. T. Wachman read the service from the Hamburg prayer book; hymns from the Hamburg hymn book were sung to the accompaniment of a parlor organ. The society met for some time on Saratoga Street near Gay; then it occupied, for several years, a room in the dwelling of Moses Hutzler, at the northeast corner of Eastern Avenue and Exeter Street, holding regular weekly services, with Max Sutro as lecturer. After changing its quarters several times, the congregation found a permanent home in its synagogue on High Street, which was dedicated on September 7, 1849. In the same year Moritz Brown succeeded Sutro as rabbi. Following the example of David Einhorn's congregation in Budapest, a number of the Har Sinai members met for services on Sunday mornings, until, one morning, the board of the congregation refused to let them enter the synagogue. Nothing daunted, these ultra-reformers, the first men to hold Sunday services in America, rented a hall at the corner of Gay and Front Streets, which the Har Sinai had once occupied, and formed a congregation of their own. It had, however, only six months of independent existence; finding that their defection endangered the continuance of the parent congregation, its members returned to the fold of their more conservative brethren. The reunited congregation now invited Einhorn to become its rabbi.

David Einhorn, born at Dispeck, Bavaria, on November 10, 1809, had been a disciple of Rabbi Wolf Hamburger and Rabbi Joshua Moses in Fürth, and had pursued philosophical studies in Würzburg and Munich. Because of his radically liberal views, Einhorn encountered opposition on the part of the Bavarian government, as well as from conservative Jews in Germany. Accepting a call to Budapest, he provoked loud protests by holding services on Sunday. When the Austrian government closed his synagogue, Einhorn resolved to continue his career in America. He became the rabbi of the Har Sinai Congregation in September, 1855; and in the following May the Har Sinai adopted the Einhorn prayer book, the "Olath Tamid," which was soon used by many other reform congregations, and which is the basis of the "Union Prayer Book" published by the Central Conference of American Rabbis. Soon after coming to Baltimore, Einhorn founded the "Sinai," a German monthly, which he continued to publish until 1863. Einhorn was soon recognized as one of the great leaders of the reform movement in America, and he is so regarded to-day. "A man of resolute character and well-defined principles, Einhorn impressed friends and antagonists alike by his consistency and courage." Ever liberal, and ever fearless in the defense of what he considered right and true, he became an ardent abolitionist. His sermons and addresses against the institution of slavery aroused such hostility that, in April, 1861, he was obliged to flee from Baltimore.

In 1849 Rabbi Rice, of the Stadt Schule, was succeeded by Henry Hochheimer. Rabbi Hochheimer was born on October 3, 1818, in Ansbach, Middle Franconia, Germany. At the age of ten he went with his parents to Ichenhausen, where his father became rabbi. After studying in the Lateinschule of Ansbach, under his grandfather, Moses Höchheimer, and in the Augsburg gymnasium, he entered the University of Munich, whence he was graduated with the doctor's degree in 1844. He then acted for five years as his father's assistant in Ichenhausen. Revolutionary addresses and articles caused warrants to be issued against him, and he had to flee the country. Emigrating to America, he was invited, upon his arrival in New York, to become rabbi of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. He served the Stadt Schule for ten years, resigning in 1859 to accept the rabbinate of the Fell's Point Congregation, the views of which were more in accord with his own, and where his leadership was accepted with greater unanimity. Hochheimer was a man of learning and ability, and for half a century a frequent contributor to the Jewish press; among his friends in Baltimore he was famous as a wit.

Henry Hochheimer.

Two years after leaving the Stadt Schule, Rabbi Rice organized a small congregation on Howard and Lexington Streets, for which he officiated as rabbi and reader of the Torah. In 1862, when the Stadt Schule was without a rabbi, he returned to his old charge, refusing, however, half of the thousand-dollar salary which the congregation offered him. He died on October 29, 1862, having officiated only a few months.

The Baltimore Sun and the German Correspondent of October 30, 1853, contain the following advertisement:

ISRAELITES OF BALTIMORE—All you who wish to join and become members of the NEW SYNAGOGUE which is now about being started are requested to attend a meeting which is to be held at Mr. PHILIP MEYER'S, IN NORTH GAY STREET, on TO-MORROW, October 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M.

All those who will attend the above-stated meeting will also have the privilege to participate in adopting the Laws, Rules and Regulations which will be adopted; also to elect the officers for said congregation.

PHILIP HERZBERG,
Chairman.

At this meeting twenty-odd men organized the Oheb Shalom Congregation, electing Julius Stiefel president. One of the reasons for the formation of the new congregation was a desire for conservative reform. The officers of the Stadt Schule refused to lend the members a scroll, on the ground that Oheb Shalom was an enemy of existing institutions. Succeeding in borrowing a scroll of the law from Mr. N. A. Schloss, of Georgetown, the Oheb Shalom Congregation held services in the third story of Osceola Hall, at the northeast corner of Gay and Lexington Streets, Isaac Hamburger officiating as reader until Reverend Altmeyer was elected cantor. The congregation showed its enterprising and progressive spirit by advertising its hours of service in the daily papers, and its membership increased at a marvelous rate.

Reverend Salomon became preacher of the congregation in March, 1854, but he held the position less than a year. Little is known of Salomon; he is said to have been a native of eastern Prussia, and a man of unusual ability. The confirmation of a large class of boys and girls, during his tenure of office, marked "an important step toward reform." In 1854 Abram Lissner succeeded Altmeyer as cantor; two years later S. M. Landsberg was elected rabbi. Under him the congregation took a first step in ritual reform, resolving to omit the Shir ha-Yichud in the Sabbath morning service. Ill health forced Landsberg to resign in 1857. The congregation determined to secure a synagogue before electing a new rabbi. A church on Hanover Street, between Pratt and Lombard, was purchased and remodeled, and on April 13, 1858, dedicated by Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Two weeks later the congregation procured an organ and introduced a choir. Desiring now to secure a rabbi of first rank, the congregation published notices in the Jewish journals of America and Europe. From among many applicants, Dr. Lewisohn, of Worms, was chosen. After being elected, however, Lewisohn reconsidered his application, and Abraham Geiger also declined the position when it was proffered to him. Lewisohn now recommended Benjamin Szold, who had just been called to the rabbinate of a Stockholm congregation, which Lewisohn himself desired to occupy. He persuaded Szold to accept an invitation to come to Baltimore, and sent to Oheb Shalom such hearty recommendation and such convincing endorsements that Szold was elected rabbi of the Baltimore congregation.

REV. DR. WILLIAM ROSENAU

W. Schubman
BALTIMORE, MD.

Benjamin Szold was born on November 15, 1829, at Nemiskert, Neutra Komistat, Hungary. Although his parents were the only Jews in the village, he began the study of Bible, Mishnah, and Talmud at an early age. After attending the famous Presburg Yeshibah, he was given the title Morena at the early age of fourteen. In 1848, Szold took up his residence in Vienna, in order to continue his studies, but participation in revolutionary activities obliged him to leave the Austrian capital in the same year. From 1849 to 1855 he tutored in private families; one of his pupils was Fräulein Sophie Schaar, who later became his wife. In the following three years he attended the University of Breslau, officiating as rabbi during the holidays in Brieg and Glogau, Silesia, and in Stockholm, Sweden. The congregation of each of these towns offered him the position of rabbi; but, persuaded by M. Lewisoohn, by Zacharias Frankel, the head of the Breslau Seminary, and by other friends, he decided to accept the call of the Oheb Shalom Congregation of Baltimore.

The numerical growth and the spiritual strength for which the Oheb Shalom Congregation acquired a wide reputation were due chiefly to the efforts and the character of the man who was its sole rabbi for thirty-four years and rabbi emeritus for nine years. Dr. Szold's interpretation of Judaism appealed to the many who were dissatisfied with orthodoxy, but were unwilling to adopt the radical reform of Einhorn, Adler, Hirsch, and Wise. His activities extended beyond his pulpit. He was an earnest worker, and often a leader in the charitable institutions of the city. When, during the Civil War, a Jew who had been sentenced to death as a deserter appealed to him for help, he visited Lincoln and then went to General Meade's headquarters in West Virginia. The Russian immigrants who flocked to his home in the eighties found in Dr. Szold and his family earnest helpers and friends. Szold's strength and courage inspired respect, his learning and ability gave him influence, his liberality won him esteem, and his generosity and true philanthropy made him beloved by thousands who found in their friend a master and a guide.

Before Szold came to Baltimore, the Oheb Shalom Congregation had adopted the Minhag Amerika in the place of the Roedelheim Tefillah; but, only one volume of this prayer-book having been published, the old book was used on the holidays. Szold pointed out the inconsistency of using two different rituals, and, after waiting in vain for the publication of the Minhag Amerika, he undertook the commission of compiling a prayer-book himself. The Abodath Israel, published in 1861, which well represents the Judaism for which Szold stood, was soon adopted by many congregations throughout the country. Besides writing a number of religious books for use in Jewish homes and schools, Rabbi Szold made scholarly contributions to Jewish literature, many of which have not been published. His Commentary on Job, written in the purest rabbinical Hebrew, is especially notable. Dr. Szold died on July 31, 1902.

In 1866, Alois Kaiser was elected cantor of the Oheb Shalom Congregation. Kaiser was born on November 10, 1840, near Vienna, Austria. He received his early education in a congregational religious school, under Dr. Henry Zirn-dorf, who later came to America, in the public school and high school of Vienna, and in the Teachers' Seminary and the Conservatory of Music. When he showed musical talent and an inclination to enter the service of the synagogue, his father took him to Solomon Sulzer. The great cantor was highly pleased with his voice, placed him in his choir, and for eight years took charge of his musical training. At the age of nineteen, he became assistant cantor in one of the synagogues of Vienna. Four years later he became cantor of the "New Temple" of Prague. All the time which he could spare from his duties he devoted to the diligent study of music and liturgy, to training his voice, and to developing his talent for composing synagogue music.

Carrying out his ambition of preserving the traditional music of the synagogue, Kaiser raised the musical services of the Oheb Shalom Congregation to a high standard, and was soon recognized as the greatest cantor of America. He published, with several other men, the Zimrath Yah (1871-1886), a four-volume collection of music which is largely of his own composition. He was one of the compilers of the volume of music published by the Jewish Women's Congress which met in Chicago in 1893, and of the Union Hymnal, prepared by the Society of American Cantors, of which he was a founder, and for several years president. The Central Conference of American Rabbis, which published the Hymnal, elected him an honorary member, in recognition of his distinguished services to the synagogue. Mr. Kaiser was actively interested in the charitable institutions of the city, especially in the Hebrew Education Society, of which he was for many years president. He died on January 5, 1908.

A few years after the organization of the Oheb Shalom Congregation, a Sefardic Congregation was formed. The Cohens and the Ettings were of German-English descent, but their parents and grandparents, upon settling in America, had, in the absence of German congregations, affiliated themselves with Portuguese congregations. The younger generations were accustomed to the Sefardic Minhag, and when the German Jews of Baltimore established congregations, they preferred holding services at home to attending a synagogue which used the slightly different Ashkenazic ritual. In the course of years, a few Portuguese Jews had settled in Baltimore, and, in 1856, these and the members of the Cohen and Etting families organized, under the leadership of Solomon Nunes Carvalho, the Sefardic Congregation Beth Israel, of which Jacob M. De Solla became rabbi. There were not, however, enough Sefardim in Baltimore to support a permanent synagogue, and, after two years of existence, the congregation was dissolved.

At about the same time, Mrs. Solomon N. Carvalho, with several young ladies of the Etting and Cohen families, established a Sunday school for instruction in the principles of conservative Judaism, taking as a pattern Miss Gratz's school in Philadelphia, where Mrs. Carvalho had been a teacher. This school, which was attended by hundreds of pupils, was the first free Hebrew school in Baltimore; but it was not the first Hebrew school, Rabbi Rice having conducted a school in his synagogue. The first regular Hebrew teacher in Baltimore seems to have been Joseph Sachs, a native of Bavaria, who, from about 1848 to 1856, conducted a school in the Lloyd Street synagogue under the auspices of the Stadt Schule. He was assisted by the rabbi and by several other teachers; instruction was given in Hebrew, German, and English, a Mr. Beale being the teacher of English. At about the same time, Samuel B. Gump conducted a similar congregational school in the Eden Street synagogue.

The best known of the Hebrew teachers of fifty years ago, and the most successful, was Jonas Goldsmith, who was born in Westheim, Bavaria, in 1823, and came to Baltimore at the age of thirty-six. Before coming to America he was employed as teacher and reader by the Jewish congregation of Hammelburg. Goldsmith was a graduate of the University of Würzburg, and had received, besides, a thorough Hebrew training. In 1859 he started a school in the Eden Street synagogue, which soon had so many pupils that he was obliged to employ a staff of five teachers. The pupils' parents were expected to pay for their tuition, but he had many free scholars. In 1864, when many hundreds attended his school, he was persuaded by Rabbi Szold to move "up-town," into the vestry rooms of the Hanover Street synagogue. For many years practically all the Jewish boys and girls of Baltimore went to him for religious and secular instruction. Pupils came also from other cities, for Goldsmith's was one of the leading Jewish schools in the country, rivalling Sachs's school in New York. When free public schools were established in Baltimore, they drew away many of his pupils, and in 1874 Goldsmith disbanded his school. From this time until his death, in 1886, he was secretary of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum.

In February, 1852, in order to provide the children of indigent parents with secular and religious education, a "Society for Educating Poor and Orphan Hebrew Children" was founded. The society sent its wards to the various schools already in existence; for a time it seems to have conducted a school of its own under Seligman Goodman. The society intended, according to the original constitution, to determine the vocation of each child placed in its charge, but this purpose was not carried out. In 1889 the society conducted a night school and a day school, and sent other pupils to the daily Hebrew school of the Lloyd Street congregation and to the Oheb Shalom Sabbath School.

In 1900 the society discarded its cumbrous name and was reorganized as the Hebrew Education Society. Three years later the Education Society purchased a building at the corner of Aisquith and Jackson Streets, and re-established its school. In 1909 a school for the training of Hebrew teachers was added. Dr. Samson Benderly, the superintendent, assisted by seven teachers, now conducts a school in which over three hundred pupils are taught Hebrew by the "natural" method, and are instructed in other Jewish subjects.

With the growth of the community, the work of the Assistance Society increased, and in 1856 the society was reorganized under the direction of its president, William S. Rayner, and was incorporated as the Hebrew Benevolent Society of Baltimore. For many years the society's work was in the hands of a number of "managers," who visited all the applicants for charity, and, after investigation, gave them orders on the treasurer. At present the society relieves its beneficiaries at their homes, thus saving their self-respect and, at the same time, giving the society's agents better opportunities for investigation. Funds were derived from the annual dues of members (three dollars a year at first) and from the money subscribed at the society's annual banquet. The society's first quarters were on what is now Post-Office Avenue. In 1900 the Benevolent Society and the Ladies' Sewing Society purchased a large building on West Fayette Street.

The Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society was formed in the same year in which the Benevolent Society was reorganized. The young ladies who organized the society received scant encouragement at first; but after a few years many others joined them, and they met regularly to make clothes for the poor, applicants coming each week to the hall in which the ladies met to be supplied with the garments that had been cut and sewed. The society has followed the example of other institutions and now employs an agent who visits the pensioners in their homes and sends the required assistance. The ladies did not content themselves with sewing, but collected money for charitable purposes by imposing annual dues and by securing subscriptions at their annual banquet and balls. The Sewing Society, though an independent organization, has always co-operated with the Hebrew Benevolent Society.

Hebrew Hospital.

At a meeting of the Benevolent Society, and at a mass meeting of Jews, individuals and societies contributed funds to erect an asylum for the sick and aged, and in 1866 the corner-stone of the new institution's building was laid. The hospital grew so rapidly that it was deemed best to let it have a separate organization, instead of continuing under the auspices of the Benevolent Society, and in 1868 it was incorporated as the Hebrew Hospital and Asylum Association. In 1886 the building was enlarged by the addition of a wing, and in 1908 the equipment of the hospital was more than doubled by the Samuel Leon Frank Memorial Building, erected by Bertha Rayner Frank (the daughter of William S. Rayner) and dedicated to the memory of her husband. At about the same time a laundry building and several other small buildings were erected on the hospital grounds. The old building is now used as a home for the aged, the Frank Memorial Building being devoted entirely to the care of the sick. The hospital maintains a free dispensary, an outdoor clinic, and a training school for nurses.

Almost the earliest evidence of Jews in Baltimore is the mention of "the Jews' Burying Ground" among "Mr. Carroll's claims." The Irish Chevra, perhaps the oldest Jewish organization in Baltimore, was largely, if not chiefly, a burial society, conducting funerals and paying the bereaved family a benefit that they might be able to observe strictly the prescribed period of mourning. The Baltimore Hebrew Congregation bought a cemetery two years after it was incorporated, and the other congregations also acquired burial grounds soon after their organization. The proper preparation and burial of the body of his dead has always been a matter of great concern to the Jew.

Before the establishment of the Free Burial Society, the burial of poor Jews depended upon the efforts of a few individuals, who were aided by the Benevolent Society, by the Ladies' Sewing Society, which furnished shrouds, and by the congregations, which provided, in turn, graves in their cemeteries. In 1867, Jacob Goldenberg, Israel Posninsky, and a few others collected some funds, and attended regularly to the funerals of the poor. Two years later, they organized the Hebrew Free Burial Society. Johns Hopkins offered the society an acre of land on Harford Road as a burying ground, but this offer was declined because the society did not wish to bury all the poor together, as in a "potter's field." A short time later, however, a plot in one of the cemeteries was accepted. The Oheb Shalom Congregation was the first to have family lots in its cemetery. Jonas Friedenwald, who succeeded S. Fiteman as president of the society, had bought a lot in this cemetery; and when the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, of which he was a member, divided its cemetery into family plots, he gave his plot in the Oheb Shalom cemetery to the Burial Society. The society exchanged it for a larger piece of ground in a less favored part of the cemetery, and later, by gift and by purchase, acquired plots in other cemeteries. As in all the charity institutions, the directors of the Free Burial Society were in the beginning its active managers, personally arranging and attending the funerals of the poor. Nowadays, when a poor family needs its services, a telephone message to the society's headquarters in the building of the Benevolent Society summons an agent, who is employed to take charge of funerals.

Several attempts were made to establish a Jewish orphan asylum in Baltimore, notably by the B'nai B'rith, one of the officers of which presided at a large meeting at which a considerable sum of money was subscribed for founding a home for orphans. Dr. Szold and other leaders pointed out the urgent necessity of an orphan asylum, and when the Benevolent Society, the oldest and largest Jewish charitable society of the city, undertook, in 1872, to establish such an institution, ample financial support was quickly secured, the subscription of Alfred J. Ulman being especially liberal. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Rayner gave the society a piece of ground at Calverton Heights, on the outskirts of the city. Five children for whom the Benevolent Society had been caring were put, with five other homeless children, into the charge of Rabbi Abraham Hofmann, who became the superintendent of the Orphan Asylum. A year after its dedication, the building of the Asylum was destroyed by fire, but a new home was quickly erected, chiefly with funds secured at a great fair held in the Concordia Opera House. The buildings of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum now include the Hannah U. Cahn Memorial Building, which was erected by Bernard Cahn, and is used as a gymnasium, and a manual training school built by Bertha Rayner Frank as a memorial to her husband. The hundred inmates of the asylum attend a public school in the neighborhood, and are instructed, in the asylum, in Hebrew and German. Rev. Samuel Freudenthal has been the superintendent of the institution since 1887.

After Einhorn left Baltimore, the pulpit of the Har Sinai Congregation was occupied for eleven years by Rabbi S. Deutsch, who was succeeded, in 1873, by Jacob Mayer. While Mayer was serving as rabbi, it became known that he had been converted to Christianity in England a number of years before. His denials and the loyal defense of his friends did not daunt his accusers; and when it was proven that he was an apostate, he was asked to resign. The controversy which followed the charges against him was very bitter, and led many to withdraw from the congregation. Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, who was called to Baltimore in 1877, was succeeded by Rabbi Samuel Sale, who remained with the congregation from 1878 to 1883. Rabbi David Philipson, who had just been graduated in the first class of the Hebrew Union College, and who succeeded Sale, established Sunday services in the Har Sinai Congregation, lecturing at first on every other Sunday evening, and, later, holding regular morning services every Sunday. He was succeeded in 1888 by Rabbi Tobias Shanfarber, who was himself succeeded in 1898 by Rabbi Charles Rubenstein.

In 1874, the Har Sinai Congregation removed from its synagogue on High Street to a building which it purchased on Lexington Street, near Pine. Twenty years later, a new house of worship was dedicated on Bolton Street.

Under the guidance of its rabbi, the Oheb Shalom Congregation became gradually and conservatively more reformed. In 1867 the second days of holidays were no longer observed, and the Misheberach was abolished. Two years later a number of changes were made in the ritual: the president and vice-president were to assist in taking out the scrolls, instead of summoning members from their pews for this service; only one scroll was to be used on the holidays, except on Simchath Torah; the members were no longer to wear the Talith; those who said Kaddish were to stand at their pews instead of coming to the pulpit; the El Malerachamim was abolished, and the cantor was henceforth to face the congregation when he read the prayers. In 1870 the congregation worshipped for a time in the New Assembly Rooms, while the synagogue was rebuilt. A few years later a congregational religious school was established.

In 1879 Julius Stiefel, who had been the president of the congregation since it was formed, was succeeded by Isaac Strouse, to whose ability and labors the congregation largely owes its material prosperity. When Dr. Szold had been with the congregation for a quarter of a century he was elected rabbi for life. For the younger members of the congregation he now preached in English once a month. In 1891 he preached on alternate Sabbaths in English and German, the prayers usually read in German being read in English when he preached in English.

For many years after its organization, the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation was strictly orthodox; when Rabbi Rice, in 1845, suggested the omission of some of the Piyutim in the service, his proposal was rejected, although fifteen years later most of these poems were abolished. In 1850 the congregation passed a law requiring its officers to keep their places of business closed on the second days of holidays; the congregation was staunch in its orthodoxy, but some of its members were evidently inclining towards reform or becoming lax. Rabbi Hochheimer introduced a confirmation service for boys and girls, which Rice had denounced as a Gentile institution. After 1866 the Haftarah was read in German instead of Hebrew. In 1859 Rabbi Hochheimer was succeeded by Bernhard Illoway, a native of Kolin, Bohemia, who had attended the school of Moses Sopher in Presburg, received the doctor's degree from the University of Budapest, and studied at the rabbinical college in Padua, and who had been obliged by political conditions to leave his native country. Emigrating to America, he occupied rabbinical positions in New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Baltimore, New Orleans, Syracuse and Cincinnati. An accomplished linguist, an eloquent preacher, a learned Talmudist, a writer of Hebrew poetry, and a frequent contributor to the Jewish press, Illoway was one of the ablest champions of orthodoxy in America. He remained with the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation for only two years, resigning in 1861 to go to New Orleans.

Rabbi Rice then returned to his old pulpit, but death summoned him after a few months of service. During the six years that followed, the congregation had no rabbi, the number of members diminished greatly, and the congregation lost its position of first importance. Abraham Hofmann, who became the rabbi of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation in 1868, was born in Dittlofsroda, Bavaria, on August 20, 1822, and received his rabbinical education in Würzburg. He left the pulpit of the "Stadt Schule" in 1873 to become the superintendent of the newly established Orphan Asylum. In 1876, he accepted a rabbinical position in Richmond, where he died two years later.

For a number of years there had been some tendency in the congregation towards reform; in 1860, when Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, visited Baltimore, he wrote in his "Israelite": "Though the Lloyd Street congregation is nominally orthodox, the large majority favor reform." A decided step was proposed in 1870, when a number of the members urged the adoption of the moderate reforms recommended by the Leipzig Synod of the previous year, in order "that the religious life of the congregation may not suffer." These reforms were rejected; a few months later, however, a number of changes in the ritual, which were earnestly advocated by Rabbi Hofmann, were adopted by a decisive majority. The conservative minority would probably have acquiesced, if the measure had not included, among minor innovations, the introduction of a mixed choir, which had long been the subject of contention, and which had been the most important innovation in the rejected proposal. On the ground that so radical an innovation violated a clause in the congregation's charter, the men who had opposed reform petitioned the Circuit Court of Baltimore to enjoin the officers of the congregation from introducing any changes in the service. The case was referred to an examiner, and there was considerable controversy before the two parties agreed amicably to disagree. The dissatisfied members resigned from the Stadt Schule and formed a congregation of their own. With the resignation of most of the orthodox element, the progress of reform became easier and more rapid. In 1813 family pews were introduced, the men and the women having before this occupied separate parts of the synagogue; the members of the congregation ceased wearing the Talith; members were no longer "called up" for the honor of assisting with the scrolls; the three-year cycle of reading the Pentateuch was adopted, and the Misheberachs and Elmalehachamins were abolished. Five years later the Roedelheim Tefillah was superseded by the Szold-Jastrow prayer-book, and shortly thereafter services were no longer held on the second days of the holidays.

In 1881, when the congregation had had no rabbi for eight years, Maurice Fluegel was called to its pulpit. Rabbi Fluegel was born in Germany, and emigrated at an early age to Roumania. He studied at the Universities of Leipzig and Paris, has held several rabbinical positions in the United States, and has published a number of books and essays on Jewish, Biblical, and religious subjects. He remained with the Stadt Schule for only three years.

Two years after Rabbi Fluegel left its pulpit, Aaron Siegfried Bettelheim became the rabbi of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. Bettelheim was born in Lipto, Szt. Miklos, Hungary, on April 4, 1830. He studied in the Presburg Yeshibah and other schools, and received a rabbinical diploma from S. L. Rapoport. After officiating for a short time as rabbi, he entered the University of Prague, whence he was graduated as a doctor of philosophy. He then became a teacher and the editor of a political weekly. While rabbi in Kaschau, he edited a Jewish weekly, and later a political periodical. His utterances in the latter aroused such feeling against him that he decided to emigrate to America with his family. In 1867 he was elected rabbi of a Philadelphia congregation and a professor at the Maimonides College. Two years later he was elected rabbi of the Beth Ahabah Congregation, of Richmond, where he established and edited a German weekly, and where he studied and was graduated at a medical college. In 1875 he was elected rabbi of a congregation in San Francisco, where he also held several public offices. He came to Baltimore in 1887 and became identified with a number of public and charitable institutions. He died on board ship, August 20, 1890, on his homeward journey from a visit to Europe. Bettelheim was a most able, active, and versatile writer; his work includes contributions to the press, short stories, and biblical criticism.

For twenty years the membership of the Stadt Schule had been steadily diminishing. In 1865 one hundred and sixty-five families were affiliated with the congregation; when Rabbi Fluegel left in 1884 there were only forty-eight. The spiritual leadership of the congregation changed hands frequently, and there were several long intervals when there was no rabbi. These facts must have been partly the cause and partly the result of the diminution in the number of members. Another cause for the decrease was the removal of the Jews to other parts of the city. Those who moved to the west were near the Oheb Shalom synagogue on Hanover Street, where Szold and Kaiser were earnestly laboring. The congregation was in desperate straits, when its president, Mr. Samuel Frank, united with Dr. Bettelheim in urging the members to build a new synagogue in the northwestern section of the city, to which many Jews had removed. In 1889, the congregation sold its synagogue on Lloyd Street, in which it had worshipped for forty-four years, and two years later dedicated a new synagogue on Madison Avenue. Under Rabbi Adolf Guttmacher, who succeeded Bettelheim, the congregation has taken on new life.

In 1892, Dr. Szold was elected rabbi emeritus of the Oheb Shalom Congregation, and was succeeded by Rabbi William Roseman. In the following year, the congregation moved to its new house of worship on Eutaw Place. Rev. Alois Kaiser, who died in 1908, after more than forty years of service, was succeeded by Rev. Jacob Schuman.

The men who resigned from the Stadt Schule in 1870 because of the introduction of reforms organized the Chizuk Emunah Congregation. After worshipping for five years in Exeter Hall, on Exeter Street, near Fayette, with Rev. L. Heilner as cantor, the congregation built a synagogue on Lloyd Street, near the home of the Stadt Schule. Rabbi Henry W. Schneeberger, of New York, led the dedication exercises; the members of the congregation were so favorably impressed with him that, although they had had no intention of securing a rabbi, they invited him to become their leader. A few years later Rev. Herman Glass became the cantor. Jonas Friedenwald, who had been, with Philip Herzberg, especially active in the organization of the congregation and in the work of building the synagogue, succeeded Judah Rosewald as president, and was himself succeeded by his son, Dr. Aaron Friedenwald, who refused, however, to occupy the president's chair on the pulpit during his father's life time. Because of the active interest of several members of the Friedenwald family in the congregation, it is frequently called "Friedenwald's Schule." In order to preclude such innovations as had led to their secession from the Stadt Schule, the founders of the Chizuk Emunah have inserted a clause in their constitution that any member who proposes a reform in the service shall cease thereby to be a member.

In 1895 the Chizuk Emunah Congregation moved up-town, erecting a synagogue at the corner of McCulloh and Mosher Streets. A few years later Michael S. Levy, who had been an active worker and leader, especially in the building of the new synagogue, succeeded Dr. Friedenwald as the president of the congregation.

After Rabbi Rice's death in 1862, the congregation which he had organized—divided, some of the members continuing to worship on Howard Street, others holding services on Eutaw Street. In 1879 the two factions reunited under the name of the Shearith Israel Congregation, and erected a synagogue on Green and German Streets. Rev. Dr. Schepsel Schaffier has been the rabbi of the congregation since 1893. In 1903 a new synagogue was built at McCulloh and Bloom Streets.

In 1859, when Rabbi Hochheimer resigned from the Lloyd Street congregation, he was immediately invited to become the rabbi of the Fell's Point Congregation, and he occupied its pulpit until, in 1892, he was made rabbi emeritus. Hochheimer and Szold were intimate friends, and their congregations took similar positions between orthodoxy and radical reform. In 1871 Hochheimer collaborated with Szold on a new edition of the "Abodath Israel," and shortly thereafter the Eden Street congregation adopted this prayer book. After Hochheimer's retirement in 1892, Wolff Willner was rabbi of the "P'int Schule" for two years. He was succeeded by Clifton H. Levy, who was followed, two years later, by Rabbi M. Rosenstein.

For a decade the migration of the Jews to other sections of the city had been diminishing the membership of the "P'int Schule." In 1890, when the Stadt Schule resolved to move up-town, it had proposed that the two oldest congregations in the city should unite and build a new synagogue in the northwestern section of the city. At this time, however, a large number of the Point members still lived downtown, and these succeeded in having the overtures rejected. As members of the Eden Street congregation moved up-town, they affiliated with the Madison Avenue or the Eutaw Place congregations, the majority with the former. These constant defections probably helped to keep the "down-towners" always in the majority in the councils of the congregation. Finally the congregation was too small to maintain itself, and in 1899 it was dissolved. Desiring to preserve the cemetery which they had used for a generation, a number of the former members had themselves incorporated in this year as the owners of the Hebrew Friendship Cemetery.

Rabbis Levy, Rosenau, and Shanfarber were, in 1895, the founders and first editors of the Jewish Comment, a weekly journal of high character, which is now edited by Mr. Louis H. Levin. Besides the Sinai and the Comment, the following Jewish periodicals have been published in Baltimore: The Jewish Chronicle (1875-77); Der Fortschritt (Yiddish, June-July, 1890); Der Baltimore Israelit (Yiddish, 1891-93); Ha-Pisgah (Hebrew, 1891-93, continued in Chicago); Der Wegweiser (Yiddish, 1896).

The Jews of Baltimore did not occupy themselves solely with the organization of congregations and the establishment of charitable institutions. Although these activities may have been deemed more important than now, they did not preclude a development of the lighter side of life. A Young Men's Hebrew Association, the Hebrew Young Men's Literary Society, and the Mendelssohn Literary Society flourished in the fifties; twenty years later the Beacon Lights, a literary and social organization, had many members. And there must have been many social and semi-social clubs of which record is lost and recollection has died out.

A society of unusual longevity was the Harmony Circle, which was organized in 1860. The members disbanded on the outbreak of the Civil War, but reorganized in 1864, electing Charles G. Hutzler president, and David Hutzler the master of ceremonies. The Harmony Circle is to-day one of the largest, as well as one of the oldest, Jewish social organizations in the country. For nearly half a century it has given an annual series of fashionable balls, for the last twenty years, under the efficient management of Mr. Moses N. Frank.

The most important social functions in Baltimore Jewry took place under the auspices of institutions which were serious in name and purpose. There were many occasions on which the congregations and the charitable societies gathered their members together, or even the entire Jewish community. When any deserving institution stood in special need of funds, a great fair was organized for its benefit. Such a fair secured funds for the Hebrew Hospital, and made possible the establishment of that institution. The greatest affair of this kind was the magnificent bazaar held in 1878 for the benefit of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, which filled the halls of the Concordia Opera House for ten days. Most of the charitable institutions depended for financial support less upon the annual dues of their members than upon the money subscribed at annual festive gatherings held for their benefit. The patrons of the Hebrew Hospital were invited each year to a Simchath Torah festival and supper; the Ladies' Sewing Society held an annual calico ball. Most notable of all the year's gatherings, however, was the banquet of the Hebrew Benevolent Society. For quite fifty years this banquet was the greatest social event of Baltimore Jewry. When the many hundreds of guests had finished the sumptuous dinner, they were addressed by men active in the work of charity, and by the mayor, the governor, and other men prominent in public life. Last on the program came the filling of the subscription list.

We may call these methods of raising money wasteful and unscientific, but we must remember that the banquets, fairs and balls had a twofold reason for existence, for it was not solely to help the cause of charity that the people came together.

Most of the fairs and bazaars, balls and banquets were held in the Concordia Opera House, which was for twenty years the center of Jewish social activities in Baltimore. The society which erected and occupied the building was The Concordia. not organized by Jews. "The Concordia German Society" was formed by a number of Germans in 1864 for "moral, scientific, literary, dramatic, agricultural and charitable purposes"; in the following year the members dedicated as its home the handsome building which they had erected at the southwest corner of Eutaw and German Streets. When Dickens visited Baltimore in 1868, he lectured on the Concordia's platform; fashionable audiences filled its halls to hear famous virtuosi; the best German and English theatrical troupes performed on its stage. Some Jews joined the society soon after its organization, and its halls and gardens were gradually more and more frequented by Jews, many attending regularly the weekly concerts. Ideas and movements, plans and institutions were discussed here at sociable gatherings; and when meetings were called to consider and execute projects, they were held in the Concordia. "The Concordia" was the greatest social institution that the Jews of Baltimore have ever had. It occupied an important place in the community until, in 1891, the building was destroyed by fire.

After a futile attempt to reorganize the society, a number of former members organized the Mercantile Club. In 1896 some of the members of the Mercantile Club formed the Clover Club, which now has a handsome and well-equipped club house on Madison Avenue.

The Phoenix Club, another social organization, was incorporated in 1886, having been formed, in part, at least, by men who had resigned from the old Concordia Club. It occupies a magnificent home on Eutaw Place, and is the Phoenix and Suburban Clubs. fashionable social organization of Baltimore Jews. The Suburban Club, organized in 1901, now has five hundred members, and maintains an attractive club-house on its grounds at Park Heights and Slade Avenues, eight miles from the city.

In the course of half a century, great changes took place among the Jews of Baltimore—changes religious, social, and economic. The Har Sinai Congregation has always been radically reformed; in the two largest congregations Changes and Growth. in the city, reform Judaism has progressed gradually and more conservatively. The Jews did not entirely lose the marks of their German birth; many German features of Jewish life were retained. The first and second generations used the German language in their homes; it was only in the nineties that the reformed congregations substituted English for German in the prayers and sermons. The younger generations, however, were natives in the land whose tongue had been strange to their parents. Still members of the Jewish community, they were a more homogeneous element of the larger community of Baltimore.

The most noteworthy development probably consisted in the economic advance of the Jews. Erstwhile peddlers became wealthy merchants; small store-keepers and second-hand dealers became large manufacturers. Their sons had all the advantages which America affords its citizens, and they used their opportunities. Many have risen high in commercial circles; many others have entered the professions, some have become active and prominent in public life.

Numerical increase, economic improvement, and changes in the city itself have led the Jews to change their places of residence. The first immigrants had settled, for the most part, in the eastern section of the city. In the sixties Residence. Lombard Street, between Lloyd Street and the Bridge, was the center of the Jewish population, so far as such a center can be determined. In the eighties a westward movement was under way, and soon many, if not most, of the German Jews lived west of Greene Street on Lexington, Baltimore, German, Lombard and Hollins Streets, many as far west as Carey Street and Carrollton Avenue. Fifteen years later another "migration" had begun. From East Baltimore and West Baltimore, Jews moved to the newer northwestern section of the city, where practically all of the German Jews of Baltimore live to-day. Although the Jews are far from segregated, there are many blocks almost entirely populated by Jews and many sections are distinctly Jewish. All the German congregations are in the district bounded by North Avenue, Bolton, Lanvale, and McCulloh Streets, a district comprising about thirty-five city blocks.

In the eighties the Jewish population of Baltimore was augmented by an immigration which soon left the Jews of German birth or descent in the minority. The Russian May Laws of 1882, which restricted the Jews in their rights of residence, hampered them in their commercial dealings, and oppressed them in many other ways, resulted in hardships which drove large numbers of Jews to America. The many immigrants who came to Baltimore settled, for the most part, in the eastern section of the city, on the streets which the German Jews were just leaving. There is almost a "colony" of Russian Jews in southwest Baltimore, and many have settled in other parts of the city; but the district in East Baltimore is still the center of Russian Jewish life in Baltimore.

The refugees of the eighties were not the first subjects of the Czar to settle in Baltimore. The first distinct immigration of East European Jews came in the sixties, when a number of Poles and Lithuanians settled in Baltimore.

Bikur Cholim Congregation. Although the services in the synagogues of their German co-religionists were conducted in Hebrew, the newcomers found slight differences in the ritual and liturgy. In addition, the fact that they spoke a different language separated them somewhat from the older Jewish residents. In 1865 they organized the Bikur Cholim Congregation, worshipping at first in the building on Gay Street which the Oheb Shalom Congregation had used some ten years before, then occupying successively two buildings on Exeter Street. The present quarters of the congregation are in a residence on High Street, the gift of Abraham Harris, one of the members.

Some years after the organization of the Congregation Bikur Cholim, dissensions led most of the Lithuanian and some of the Polish members to withdraw. These men formed the "Russian Congregation Benai Israel," which now occupies the old synagogue of the Chizuk Emunah Congregation, on Lloyd Street.

The great wave of Russian immigration set in in 1882. Arriving in vast numbers, and often in need of assistance, the immigrants were aided by the Benevolent Society and the other charitable institutions of the city. It was not long, however, before the new settlers had formed their own organizations.

The first institution that they established was a Hebrew school. When the Talmud Torah had long outgrown the single room which was rented for its pupils, adequate quarters were secured in a building on High Street. Yiddish, which continued to be the vernacular of the Russian Jews in Baltimore, was for many years used in this school; the proposal to substitute English met with strong opposition, many holding the jargon almost as sacred as Hebrew and as Talmud Torah.

Judaism itself. It was chiefly through the efforts of Mr. Tanchum Silberman and Rabbi William Rosenau that English was at last introduced. Those who could not be reconciled to the change withdrew their support from the Talmud Torah and formed a new school—the Talmud Torah Ve-he-Emunah. When the extinction of the Talmud Torah seemed imminent, a few men undertook to rehabilitate the school by securing a new home. With funds collected from both down-town and up-town Jews, a building on Baltimore Street, near Lloyd, was purchased and remodeled, in which a daily Hebrew school, of which Rev. Elias Rabinowitz is superintendent, is now attended by seven hundred pupils. The re-establishment of the Talmud Torah is largely due to the work of Mr. Tanchum Silberman. Several societies have their quarters in Talmud Torah Hall, which is becoming, even apart from the school, an important institution.

The Hebrew Literary Society, founded by a number of Maskilim, was one of a number of organizations formed by Russian Jews. Feeling the need of English instruction for themselves and their immigrant brethren, its members, with the assistance of Miss Henrietta Szold, established a night school in 1889. Miss Szold was the superintendent of the school until 1893, when other duties forced her to resign. She was succeeded by Miss Grace Bendann (Mrs. B. H. Hartogensis). This school rendered invaluable service, aiding five thousand men, women and children in learning the English language, American history and the rights and duties of American citizenship. The school was closed in 1897, when its directors had been assured the city would establish similar night schools to continue its work.

The Daughters in Israel, organized in 1890, conducts a Working Girls' Home, the Frank Sabbath School and such classes and clubs as are usually found in settlement houses. The Maccabean House, established in 1900 for the purpose of keeping boys off the streets at night, grew steadily until more than a thousand boys and young men became members of the clubs or classes which met in the House. The Daughters in Israel and the Maccabeans amalgamated in 1909 under the name of the Jewish Educational Alliance.

In 1890 renewed pogroms in Russia increased the immigration which had continued since the year of the May Laws. Ten or twelve of the Russian Jews who had settled in Baltimore formed a small organization to assist the new immigrants. Collecting money from their acquaintances, they placed a number of poor men in boarding-houses and supported them a few days to give them an opportunity of securing employment. The society was soon large enough to purchase a house on Lombard Street, near Lloyd. Many old people who had to support themselves peddled matches and trinkets in the streets; a number of these were sheltered by the society, which now assumed the name of the Hebrew Friendly Inn and Aged Home. Outgrowing its quarters, the society secured a large building on Aisquith Street, in which sixty aged men and women have found an asylum. The Inn is the headquarters for the relief of poor Jews who spend only a short time in Baltimore; all who apply for aid are given food and shelter for three days.

The formation of the Hebrew Children's Sheltering and Protective Association was somewhat similar to that of the Friendly Inn. Several men who saw a policeman leading some homeless children to a public institution persuaded the officer to surrender the waifs to them and undertook to care for them. They were given, with several others, into the charge of a poor family on Harrison Street. To provide a home for these and for other homeless or neglected children a society was organized which collected a few large and many small contributions and purchased a building on South High Street. When, after two years, the society sheltered thirty children and a large number of applicants could not be accommodated, a new home was bought at the corner of Lexington and Aisquith Streets. The society now cares for a hundred children, besides giving financial aid to the widowed mothers of a dozen others. Again overcrowded, the association has purchased a piece of ground on North Broadway, near Baltimore Street, on which M. S. Levy and his sons have erected the Betsy Levy Memorial Building.

In 1898 three philanthropic institutions were established: a Free Burial Society, the Hebrew Emigrants' Protective Association and the Gemilath Chassodim, or Free Loan Association. The Free Loan Society has enabled many men to help themselves, with slight expense to the community and without obliging them to accept charity. Three years later the Young Ladies' Benevolent Society was organized by a group of young women who had supported an invalid girl and her brother and who then determined to continue their good work. The society which they formed cares for many women who require medical attendance.

When Russian Jews came to Baltimore they came at once in such great numbers that the immigrants from each town or district were able to organize a minyan of their own. This is probably one reason for the large number of congregations formed by East European Jews in Baltimore. In 1909 there were twenty-five Russian congregations in the city. All of them are orthodox, nearly all of them maintain schools and many have other societies connected with them. A few have synagogues; most of them hold services in the rooms of a dwelling and have no regular rabbi.

The corporate names of several of the congregations indicate the European homes of their founders. Most of the others bear, colloquially, the names of Russian towns or districts. The "Mikro Kodesh," which was formed in 1886, is better known as the "Pokroyer Schule"; the Aitz Chaim, which occupies the old Eden Street Synagogue, is the "Proshnitz Schule"; the Beth Yakov bears the name "Visheyer," and the Ohel Yakov is regularly known as the "Byalistoker Schule."

The most notable event of recent years in Baltimore Jewry is the federation of the charitable institutions, a step which had been advocated and planned as early as 1890 by men who were then active in communal work. As the old methods of raising funds grew more and more unpopular, and came to be considered wasteful as well as annoying, the subscribers became convinced of the greater efficacy that would result from co-operation and a more scientific administration. In 1906, the older institutions of the city, which had been founded by German Jews, formed the Federated Jewish Charities, under the direction of Professor Jacob H. Hollander, who became the first president of the Federation. By a generous gift from Mr. Jacob Epstein, the Federation was enabled to establish a Jewish Home for Consumptives, purchasing land near Reisterstown, Baltimore County, on which have been erected the Jacob Epstein Sanatorium, the Solomon Kann Memorial Cottage, and the Samuel and Emma Rosenthal Cottage. In 1907, the charitable societies which had been organized by Russian Jews were federated under the name of the United Hebrew Charities. The existence of two federations is justified by practical reasons of expediency; the two organizations work not merely in harmony, but in active co-operation. The centralized direction of their philanthropic work has resulted indirectly in strengthening the communal consciousness of the Jews of Baltimore.

The history of the Jews of Baltimore, extending over a period of a century and a quarter, is probably a fair example of the growth and development of a Jewish community in an American city. In another country and in another century, it might be termed phenomenal, if a steady and orderly development can be so described. We must make allowance for the growth of the city itself, but the Jews of Baltimore have grown, in some senses, at least, even more rapidly. The immigrants of seventy years ago were, with scarcely an exception, obliged to struggle for a livelihood. No person who reads the signs on Baltimore's business streets or scans the advertisements in the newspapers needs to be told of the high position which their sons and grandsons occupy in commercial circles to-day. And the more recent immigrants are making even more rapid progress.

Since 1826, when Solomon Etting and Jacob I. Cohen, Jr., were elected to the City Council, Jews have engaged in civic, as well as in commercial, activities. In legislative halls, on the bench, at the bar, and in other offices, they have worked for the common good, and, with physicians and other public servants, have sustained the reputation of the Jew.

In two generations, the numbers of the Jews have increased a hundredfold. In 1901, Dr. George E. Barnett estimated, after careful investigations and computation, that there were 25,000 Jews in Baltimore. In 1910, the number is probably between 40,000 and 50,000.

Baltimore is generally regarded a stronghold of conservative Judaism. That the Jews in Baltimore are more conservative than their co-religionists in other cities is due largely to the fact that Baltimore is itself conservative, in part, perhaps, to the manner in which Jews settled in Baltimore, and in part, it may be, to the fact that the first settlers came from religious communities in Europe and were more religious than were many other immigrants. In large measure, however, the religious spirit which has always existed among the Jews of Baltimore is due to the work of two men—Rabbi Rice and Rabbi Szold. The first was able to imbue his people with that true spirit of orthodox Judaism which he so strongly felt. When reform Judaism began to claim adherents in Baltimore, Szold, in directing its progress, kept it from obliterating all traces of orthodox Judaism, and kept alive that sympathy with the fathers which is the keystone of conservatism.

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF BALTIMORE JEWS

BY REV. DR. CHARLES A. BUBENSTEIN.

THE religious life of Baltimore Jews gives scope for a very interesting study. Starting with a few scattered Jewish families in the early part of the last century the Jewish community of Baltimore today exhibits a congregational activity that has long been noted in the religious history of American Jews. Without taking into consideration the religious institutions maintained by recent or comparatively recent Jewish settlers in Baltimore, of which there is a very large number, five large congregations, all in a flourishing condition, testify to the uniform religious activity that has characterized Baltimore Jewish families through three successive generations. What is especially noteworthy is the fact that this religious development has been of a varied kind, showing that the religious evolution of the Baltimore Jewish community is not due simply to the process of natural growth, but also to the influence of certain men, laymen as well as rabbis, who left their impress upon the Jewish life of Baltimore. The five congregations whose respective histories form the greater portion of the history of Baltimore Jews present practically five distinct phases of Judaism, both as to belief and practice, from uncompromising orthodoxy to equally uncompromising reform.

The history of the Jewish congregations in Baltimore begins with the year 1829. That was an eventful year for Jews of Maryland, because with the charter granted to the first Jewish congregation in the State, Jews in Maryland for the first time practically enjoyed the full rights of American citizenship. It must be recalled that in the settlement of Maryland in the middle of the seventeenth century full civic rights were withheld from Jewish settlers on account of their faith. The profession of Christian belief was then an indispensable qualification. After the formation of the American government an attempt was made in 1796-1797 to remove that disability from Maryland Jews. By the laws of the national government no Jew could be debarred from the full prerogatives of citizenship, including the right to hold office; yet in Maryland that specific right was denied to Jews because of their faith. Such discrimination was so contrary to the spirit of the American constitution, and so offensive to the liberal tendencies of the age, that an earnest attempt was made in the Maryland legislature in 1818 to remedy the anomalous situation. The attempt was productive only of long and bitter discussion, and ended at the time only in utter failure. The agitation, however, was not altogether in vain, for men's consciences were gradually aroused and much serious thought was given to the injustice inflicted upon the Jews of Maryland who were fast becoming a large and influential portion of the population of the State. The next time the matter was agitated, therefore, there was greater hope for success. In 1825 what was known as the "Jew Bill," carrying with it the removal of all disabilities from Jews, because they professed a different faith, passed both houses of the Maryland legislature. The success of this measure was largely due to the influence of the Etting and Cohen families, who had long been residents of Baltimore and who had long enjoyed the general esteem of the community.

The "Jew Bill" passed by the Maryland legislature in 1825 became a law in 1826. Following closely upon this favorable legislation there was presented a bill in the lower house in 1829 empowering certain Jewish citizens of Baltimore to organize themselves into a congregation. Perhaps because it was felt that Jews in Maryland were acquiring too many privileges, the bill was defeated by a large majority on its second reading. Better counsels, however, prevailed. The rejection of the measure was immediately reconsidered and this time the bill was passed. By February 23 it was passed by the Senate and immediately became a law.

The year 1829, therefore, marks the beginning of Jewish congregational activity in Baltimore and in Maryland. In the act empowering certain Jewish citizens to organize a congregation and build a synagogue in Baltimore, John M. Dyer, Moses Millem, Lewis Silver, Levi Benjamin and Joseph Osterman are named as the charter members. This congregation, styled the "Baltimore Hebrew Congregation," may properly be called the "Mother of Jewish Congregations" in Baltimore. The other congregations of the five now existing actually sprang from the membership of the original congregational body incorporated by the laws of Maryland in 1829. Before Jewish worship thus received the authority and sanction of the State, Jewish families in Baltimore had gathered for divine service in the house of Zalma Rehiné, a highly respected Jew of the city at that time. Those who constituted that informal congregation were among the first members of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, which was soon to spread out and give out branches in the form of other congregations in various parts of the city.

From 1829 to 1843 this was the only Jewish congregation in the city. In 1838, in what is known as "Fell's Point," then an outlying district and separate and distinct from the city, Jewish settlers organized the "Fell's Point Hebrew Friendship Congregation," now extinct. Later it built a synagogue in Eden Street, when "Fell's Point" became part of the city. With the removal of the majority of its members to other parts of the city the congregation rapidly declined and in 1899 was dissolved. The venerable Henry Hochheimer was rabbi of this congregation from 1859 to 1892.

The Baltimore Hebrew Congregation in the city proper quickly grew in numbers, and was compelled from time to time to remove to more spacious quarters. From a room over a grocery, at the corner of Bond and Fleet Streets, it moved first to North Exeter Street, then to High Street, then in 1837 to a three-story brick dwelling in Harrison Street. In 1845 its synagogue in Lloyd Street was completed, the first synagogue in Maryland. The dedication naturally was a great event for Jews of Baltimore, and special sermons were delivered on that occasion by Rabbi S. M. Isaacs, of New York, and the celebrated Rabbi Isaac Leeser, of Philadelphia.

The first rabbi of the congregation was Abraham Rice, a man known for great piety and learning. He was a fearless exponent of the orthodox Jewish faith, and his teachings carried great weight. It was his uncompromising attitude towards the Reform tendencies in Judaism which, originating in Germany, soon began to modify Jewish worship and Jewish practice in this country, led to the first secession from the mother congregation. In 1842 the "Har Sinai Verein," now the Har Sinai Congregation, was organized in protest against the strict orthodoxy of Rabbi Rice. This congregation secured its charter in 1843 and worshipped first in High Street, then in Lexington Street, and at present in its handsome synagogue at the corner of Bolton and Wilson Streets. Its first rabbi was Max Sutro, who was followed by Moritz Brown. With the coming of David Einhorn as rabbi, Har Sinai Congregation entered on a new and distinct line of development as the reform Jewish congregation of Baltimore. It is a source of pride to this congregation that it possesses the best traditions of the man who so greatly influenced the development of American Judaism for the past two generations. His utterances in the pulpit and out are treasured by many families of the congregation as the utterances of a prophet who was not without honor in their midst, and his name is still a source of inspiration to them, though it is nearly thirty years since he departed this life and more than two score years since he left the Har Sinai pulpit. He was rabbi in Baltimore only from 1855 to 1861, but in those few years the whole course of Reform Judaism in America was formed. Einhorn, it may be said, was among the chief forces in shaping its direction. Coming to this country with a brilliant reputation, his first essay in the Reform field marked him a great power. His influence soon became far reaching and he was deemed as authoritative in the exposition of Jewish Reform, as Abraham Rice in his day was in the expression of Jewish orthodoxy. His influence, however, was rather felt by the thinkers in Jewish communities than by the general Jewish public. The popular reformer among American Jews in Einhorn's time was Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, O.

The services rendered by Einhorn, important as they were considered at the time, appear now invaluable to the Reform element of the American synagogue. His monthly journal, the Sinai, which appeared in Baltimore from February, 1856, to January, 1863, is today the greatest inspiration for the Reform rabbi. In all the eight volumes that he issued the best contributions by far are Einhorn's own sermons, with their marvelously eloquent exposition of Jewish idealism from the Reform point of view. Yet this journal, the Sinai, is minor in importance compared with that other work which is monumental of his great labors in the Reform Jewish cause, his "Oloth Tamid." This prayer-book, written for Har Sinai Congregation, has long been regarded as the best prayer-book that has come from the Jewish Reform movement. The congregation regards the fact with the greatest pride that Einhorn himself introduced this most notable work for congregational worship while officiating as the rabbi.

Following David Einhorn as rabbis of the congregation were Solomon Deutsch, Jacob Mayer, Emil G. Hirsch, Samuel Sale, David Philipson and Tobias Schaufarber. The rabbi at present is C. A. Rubenstein.

The officers of the congregation are: M. Shakman, president; Nathan H. Hirshberg, vice-president; M. S. Pacholder, treasurer, and Albert H. Likes, secretary.

Returning to the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, from which the Har Sinai Congregation branched off, we find it in nowise weakened by the secession, but rather growing in numbers as new Jewish families began settling in Baltimore as a result of the general immigration movement from Europe that started in 1848. Rabbi Rice retired to private life in 1849 and was succeeded in turn by Rev. Dr. Henry Hochheimer, B. Illoway, Abraham Hofman, Maurice Fluegel, A. S. Bettelheim and the present rabbi, Adolf Guttmacher. The congregation worshipped in the Lloyd Street Synagogue until 1891, when its present house of worship, corner of Madison Avenue and Robert Street, one of the most beautiful synagogues in the country, was dedicated. The officers of the congregation are: Moses Frank, president; Henry Burgunder, vice-president; Sody Salabes, treasurer, and Solomon Preiss, secretary. Jacob Schvanefeld is the cantor.

In 1853 there was another secession from the parent congregation, but this time along more conservative lines. It was not so much due to a desire for a change in the mode of worship as to the fact that the Jewish population was shifting towards the southwestern part of the city and great need was felt for another synagogue. So the Oheb Sholem congregation was organized with a place of worship in Hanover Street. The first rabbis of this congregation were: Solomon and I. M. Landsberg. In 1859 Benjamin Syold became rabbi, serving until 1892. During his long, active ministration of thirty-three years he wielded great influence in the Baltimore Jewish community, contributing very largely to the shaping of its religious life and thought. He rendered great service to Judaism in America by his scholarly labors, and, more especially, by writing a prayer-book, in which M. Jastrow, of Philadelphia, collaborated, that admirably answered the needs of conservative American congregations. The present rabbi of the congregation is William Rosenau. The cantor is Jacob Schuman. His predecessor, the celebrated cantor Alois Kaiser, contributed a great share to the development of the liturgy in the American Synagogue. From Hanover Street the congregation moved to its present beautiful house of worship, corner of Eutaw Place and Lanvale Street. The officers of the congregation are: Isaac Strouse, president; Henry Sonneborn, vice-president; Louis Gump, treasurer, and Louis Adler, secretary.

Still another congregation branched off from the original Baltimore Hebrew Congregation in 1871. This is the Chizuk Emoonah Congregation, worshipping now in its new synagogue, corner of McCulloh and Mosher Streets. The Reform movement among American Jews was making rapid strides. Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, was formulating a plan for the education of Reform rabbis, and his paper, The American Israelite, found rapid circulation throughout the Western and Southern Jewish communities and was wielding great power. In 1873 the Union of American Hebrew Congregations was organized, and Wise's idea of a seminary for the training of Reform rabbis was fast approaching actualization. In Baltimore itself the Reform ideas of Einhorn had taken firm root. The Baltimore Hebrew Congregation had consistently held at first to orthodox views, but was gradually veering toward the Reform movement. A number of changes were made in the ritual for Sabbath and holidays and an effort was made to introduce a mixed choir. There was a minority in the congregation that did not favor these innovations and these withdrew and formed the Chizuk Emoonah Congregation. There was great discussion following this withdrawal, the minority invoking the aid of the law. Of this congregation Henry W. Schneeberger has been rabbi since 1876. The cantor is Herman Glass. The officers of the congregation are: M. S. Levy, president; Dr. Harry Friedenwald, vice-president; Benjamin Friedman, treasurer, and Milton Fleischer, secretary.

Two small orthodox congregations that had grown up in the southwestern part of the city were consolidated in 1876 into the Shearith Israel Congregation, that now worships in its new synagogue, corner of McCulloh and Bloom Streets. Of the five congregations here described, the Shearith Israel is considered the most orthodox. S. Schaffer has been the rabbi for the past sixteen years. The cantor is E. Jaffe. The officers of the congregation are: Manes Strauss, president; Herman Cohen, vice-president; Samuel Senker, treasurer; Abraham Plaut, secretary.

In describing the five congregations which form an integral part of the history of Baltimore Jews, the list is far from exhausted. The disturbances in Russia in 1881-1882, and those within more recent years, drove hundreds of thousands of Jews to our hospitable shores. While the majority of the immigrants remained in New York, a large number of them came to Baltimore. Here there are no less than twenty congregations formed of these new settlers, the grouping being usually determined by the city or district in Europe from which they came. Of these congregations only eight have synagogues of their own, situated in various parts of the city, but chiefly in the southern and southeastern sections.

Thus the organization of religious worship among Jews in Baltimore, from a modest beginning in 1829, has developed in the course of three generations into a great center of Jewish religious life. The manner in which the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation was first formed and the regularity, one might say, with which a certain group from time to time left the parent stock to begin a separate congregational existence of its own, marks the whole religious development of Baltimore Jews with great interest. What is especially to be noted is the fact that the Jewish population kept pace with the successive secessions and the "mother" congregation, as well as those that issued from it, grew with time "from strength to strength." All now are in a flourishing condition. The five new synagogues which they all erected within recent years afford substantial proof of their prosperous state. It is worthy of remark that while the first congregation to be formed from the parent religious organization has become a pronounced type of the Reform movement in American Judaism, the last congregation to be thus formed has remained consistently conservative. Har Sinai Congregation and Chizuk Emoonah Congregation, both springing from the original Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, present two contrasting aspects of Jewish worship and Jewish thought.

This sketch of the rise and progress of Jewish congregational activity in Baltimore would scarcely be complete without a word about the properties held by the various congregations for burial purposes. In the early days, when Baltimore Jews formed no corporate body, a burial place could be acquired only by an individual. The first cemetery was thus held by Levi and Solomon Etting. A lot near East Monument Street, known as "Jew Alley in Ensor's town," was deeded to them by Charles Carroll in 1801. Previous to that date, in 1786, there was a special burial place for Jews in the same locality. To-day there are eight large Jewish cemeteries in or near Baltimore. The largest, in Belair Road, is the property of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. The Oheb Sholem Congregation owns the cemetery on the Trapp Road. The cemetery in Brehm's Lane, near Belair Road, is the property of Har Sinai Congregation. The Fell's Point Congregation, now extinct, which had its synagogue in Eden Street, owned the cemetery on the Philadelphia Road. When the congregation was dissolved the property was taken over by former members, who created for that purpose a separate corporation.

ZIONISM.

BY REV. DR. S. SCHAEFFER.

ZIONISM, which was introduced to the great public with due solemnity and candid enthusiasm at the first Basle Congress but thirteen years ago, has already made history. The keen observer cannot fail to notice a marked change in the trend of the Jewish mind which is due to the influences of that movement. This is not surprising. The aim of Zionism is to create in Palestine a publicly legally secured home for the Jewish people. But this is an ideal which inspired, actuated and directed the children of Israel long before the very word, Zion, was coined; long before the fortress of that name had been erected. Indeed, this ideal is even older than official Judaism, and was one of the powerful factors which shaped Judaism or rather created that body which was destined to serve and still does serve as standard bearer and transmitter of the truth and the sublime principles which Judaism implies.

Ever since God promised Abraham to make of him a great nation and to give him the land Canaan as an inheritance, which occurred, according to the records, four centuries before Judaism was officially launched from the top of Sinai by the divine revelation, Jewish nationality was inseparably wedded to Palestine. The descendants of Abraham claimed that country as their promised land, and the mere claim framed the conditions and effected the results which otherwise the actual possession of territory accomplished. That very claim banded together the single individuals into a strong, characteristic unit, preventing their being assimilated with others and making of them a peculiar nation, just as the dwelling on one territory has made of other groups of mankind various and specific nations. Israel waged fierce and successful wars against the tribes which inhabited Canaan just because of that promise which the leaders often repeated and which convinced the people that, for reasons known only to Providence, Israel's message to mankind will have a greater and more general effect when proclaimed from the hill-tops of that peculiar spot of the earth.

Disastrous as the exile into Babylon was it did not destroy the confidence of the unfortunate exiles. On the contrary, the godly inspired prophets who with flaming words and vigorous, rousing speech repeatedly renewed the ancient promise and pictured pathetically the deplorable state of the desolate country and the sad condition of the children who are not permitted to rest their weary heads on their mother's lap, infinitely strengthened the deeply rooted conviction which guided the former generations and having kindled within the bosoms of their afflicted brethren the dormant spark of love for their promised land into blazing enthusiasm, successfully accomplished the reunion of nation and country, the restoration of Israel's previous home.

Strange though it be, the second and more severe exile likewise served to intensify beyond measure Israel's yearning for the sacred land. Many fervent prayers, touching elegies and tearful lamentations, which were written by men of genius, distinguished alike as scholars and philosophers, as saints and sages, were incorporated in the liturgy and were recited with much feeling, ardent devotion and great earnestness, often with real, burning tears, in every community that was ever established in all parts of the globe. By this means the ancient ideal which once stirred in Israel's veins the fighting blood and was the cause for war and rebellion, gradually crystallized and became identified with a vital article of creed of equally ancient origin, with the belief in the coming of Messiah. When peace and good-will shall reign supreme on earth no one would ever hinder Israel from returning to Palestine.

As a matter of faith, finding expression, as it did, not only in daily prayers but also on all occasions of either joy or sorrow, whenever the soul is roused to its various manifestations, it also adopted the characteristic of true faith which is inspiring, cheering and consoling, instilling hope, courage and patience, but never stirring up excitement, never provoking fierce antagonism.

About the middle of the last century a number of associations of Lovers of Zion were organized in many cities of various countries for the purpose of founding colonies in Palestine which should be worked and cultivated by Jewish hands. This was done chiefly out of love for the land of the Fathers and also with the intention to make both Palestine and colonization conspicuous in the eyes of the Jewish people. An indistinct hope, however, was equally cherished that if such work be continued for centuries it might possibly benefit in the last the nation at large.

Such was the nature of Zionism of late.

In 1896, however, Zionism received a new impetus, which again changed its character. From a sober principle of faith it was turned into a movement which means an object for agitation and propaganda. The new tendency was more expressly indicated by the additional epithet of "political." Political Zionism, or Zionism viewed from a political and economical standpoint, has no other aim than that of the ancient idea, only the motives, the reasons, its scope and the mode of its promotion changed according to the different circumstances and the prevailing spirit of the time. Modern Zionism has no recent divine authority, but it can hardly be denied that it fully deserves divine grace and favor. It is not prompted by the express behest of him who rules the destinies of nations, but as it is prompted by dire necessity which cries for relief, it cannot but be pleasing in the eyes of the supreme Regent.

Three distinct and grave causes jointly forced the advent of the new idea.

Millions of Jewish people, men, women and children, are, in spite of general enlightenment, culture and progress, still wrongfully and cruelly oppressed in various countries and treated as an inferior class of citizens for no other fault than that they are Jews. It is not necessary to describe in detail the distressing and humiliating position of these innocent sufferers, it is known to all who are familiar with the current events. These unfortunates for whom, it seems, there is no help whatsoever, and who are as much a reproach to civilization as they are an object of commiseration, are in urgent need of a home where they could breathe freely the air which the good Lord provides for all living creatures and lead a life corresponding to the dignity of man. Nothing but a country for themselves with an administration of their own where they would offend no strangers and escape themselves from the injustice and insults of strangers could help those millions who are now doomed to poverty and degradation. There could be no nobler work than to assist by whatever means in the creation of a secure home in Palestine for these self-respecting, God-fearing, worthy people, whose steady and bitter complaints never touch the hearts of their tormentors.

Again, the general craving for independence, emancipation and liberty which made itself strongly felt towards the latter part of the nineteenth century in every country where civilization had acquired a firm footing, brought about in the house of Israel, as it did everywhere else, a deplorable decline of the religious spirit and also an inclination towards assimilation. The numbers of those who drifted away from the religion of their fathers, either compelled by the force of circumstances, or unwittingly by mere negligence, or on purpose, carried away by the rise of a materialistic wave and scepticism, grew with every year larger and caused apprehension and alarm in all directions. Those who firmly stand by tradition and who know of no duty more urgent and more holy than the duty to perpetuate Judaism looked to the future with anxiety and fear and were ready to grasp any opportunity by which the growing evil could be remedied or at least checked. Christendom, too, seemed to dislike the new tendency. At least, anti-semitism spread in proportion to the spread of assimilation. The most cruel means were employed, as it were, to repulse the intruders and to warn them that they had better stay where they were. The consequence was that those who had considered assimilation the most practical means for solving the aggravating and difficult problem, the so-called Jewish question, were sorely disappointed and found themselves isolated and forsaken. From their brethren they were estranged, and from the strangers whose friendship they courted they were unceremoniously repulsed. Their pride was humiliated, their national feeling, of whose secret existence they were scarcely aware, was deeply wounded and roused, and their confidence in civilization was mightily shaken. They realized that they needed a home of their own where they could live among their equals and escape the sting of chilly reserve and haughty demeanor with which they invariably met. The truth dawned upon them that between Jew and Gentile good-will may prevail but never intimacy.

The first one to make this confession in public was Dr. Theodore Herzl, who by this time needs no introduction to the reader, and a large number of the uncompromising, traditional religious wing heartily and loudly applauded both the confession and the unreserved frankness, the manly courage, the self-respect, the dignity and just pride which the open confession involved. With genuine brotherly affection they grasped the hand of the home-coming brother, bowed before the new champion of the truth in admiration, and offered him their congratulations together with their assistance. Thus encouraged, Herzl embraced the idea which is embodied in the words of the daily prayer, "Let our eyes behold thy return unto Zion," with the entire fire of his big heart, noble soul and trained mind, and at once raised the battle-cry, "Back to Judaism, back to Zion."

The acquisition of Palestine as a home for the Jewish people, he argued, is by no means beyond the bounds of possibility. Stranger things have been accomplished in the last century. He claimed, what every impartial, unsophisticated and just observer of things must concede, that the realization of Israel's everlasting desire would be unquestionably the greatest boon for Jew and Gentile alike and no less for the Turkish government. Palestine is now practically a desert and of little value. But, if inhabited, colonized and cultivated by millions of thrifty hands, it would soon prove its ancient fame of being a land that flows with milk and honey and would become a remarkable source of large revenue. Besides, the growth and steady development of commerce and industry which is bound to follow in the wake of Jewish centralization and activity would certainly benefit immeasurably the whole Turkish empire.

Herzl advocated peaceful but energetic and steady activity in behalf of political Zionism. The great masses of the Jewish people should be enlightened and roused to the realization of their sad situation, that they might be as persistent in their claim for relief of their intolerable condition as they are in praying and lamenting, that they substantiate the outpouring of their souls by practical work and raise sufficient funds which are necessary for the eventual purchase of the land and the colonization thereof. Strong and impressive appeals should also be made to the sense of justice of all intelligent classes of the entire civilized world and especially to the reigning houses of the great powers who sway the destinies of nations. If Jew and Gentile were fully informed of the aim and the scope of Zionism and the blessings it involves they would both, he claimed, hasten to assist in the promotion of the work which, if successfully accomplished, would make the unjustly persecuted of many centuries free and happy, would relieve Christendom of grave reproaches, of a disgrace which hampered the progress of its lofty ideals and supreme endeavor, and would thus bring mankind a good stretch nearer the age of undisturbed peace and general brotherhood.

Thus Herzl became father of the movement for which he sacrificed his young life. Eight continuous years he labored indefatigably with might and main, pleading eloquently for the sacred cause that filled his great soul, interviewing nobles, captains of finance, rulers and kings, organizing the forces that flocked to his aid and guiding them with a strong hand, an iron will, political sagacity and a mild, well-balanced temper until exhaustion and, perhaps, some disappointment broke his true heart. He died bemoaned not only by the hosts of Zionists but also by all the intelligent of the entire world, who paid a high tribute to the brilliancy of his mind, the strength and firmness of his convictions, the sterling qualities of his clean character and his admirable skill for leadership which he proved by uniting and controlling all factions, various though they were concerning their views, their disposition and the degree of their general education.

Herzel was the father of the new idea, but he and the idea itself were creations of the forceful current events and the predominating spirit of the time. Dire need of the proletariat, anxious solicitations for the preservation of Judaism, strongly felt by the more enlightened of the faithful religious cohorts, and offended national pride experienced by those who, relying on civilization, claimed the privilege of being counted as equals in all social circles, were the three factors that forced the ancient ideal to the front and prompted Herzel to serve as its champion.

Herzel died, but the idea which he set in motion is immortal, the movement is still on foot and will continue to influence the Jewish masses and some of the privileged non-Jewish classes until either the sad causes disappear, which is not probable, or until the goal of Zionism is reached, which is more probable, because Providence is bound to interfere for the sake of the oppressed as well as for the sake of the pledged promise which is still awaiting redemption.

When the first Congress opened in Basel in 1897 there were representatives of all the three factors mentioned in large numbers present, and all greeted the beginning of a new era with unbounded enthusiasm, great hope and genuine joy. But just as many rose up in all parts of the world in vehement opposition to the new form of Zionism. Many of the religious flank who grew up in the belief that only the miraculous coming of the Messiah will bring back Israel to Palestine, considered the new movement as an attempt to anticipate Providence, and therefore as irreligious. They also mistrusted and feared the leaders, who emphatically pointed to the economical moment of the question and laid stress upon the national feature of the aspiration but left the care for religion to the religious themselves. Again, Reform Judaism heard in the stirring notes of the song, "The Hope," the death-knell of reform, and rose in a body to fight Zionism. Many advocates of assimilation, too, were reluctant to give up the hope that the doors of society will finally be opened to them. They all condemned Zionism as a revolutionary movement, accused the Zionists of lack of patriotism, and attacked the leaders as demagogues. Feeling ran high, and fierce battles were fought by the pen and with the word in mass-meetings, by the medium of the daily papers, in pamphlets and in private circles.

However, after a few years the excitement perceptibly abated and made room for a cooler, more healthy and more acceptable conception of the movement, which brought the opposing parties a great deal nearer. The novelty of having a congress, and especially such a congress, composed of many hundreds of delegates who come from all parts of the world, represent every walk in life and vary from each other in external appearance, in the style of their apparel as much as in the degree of their education and the form and scope of their belief, but are united as one man in the burning desire, the great effort to solve a problem of such vital importance, which feature at first fascinated, almost intoxicated, the delegates as well as their constituents, this novelty gradually wore off, lost its powerful charm, and sound reasoning and sober deliberation took the place of visionary rapture. The fact became apparent that the sanguine hope for immediate results, which the more arduous and less deliberate cherished, was without any foundation. The leaders cautiously warned against entertaining deceptive expectations and pointed out that for the present all work must be concentrated upon preparations. The national feeling must be stimulated, intensified, deepened and broadened. The solidarity of the Jewish people of all countries must be strengthened and made obvious by means of education, by the revival of the Hebrew language and by the study of the Jewish literature and Jewish history. The proletariat should be trained in the work of practical agriculture, which ever was and always will be the basis for the existence and prosperity of any country or nation. Land must be bought in Palestine and colonized, and, what is of no less importance, material means must be accumulated to be ready for use. Thus prepared and equipped with all necessary requirements and fortified with patience and a willingness to wait, the day will surely arrive when the hotly pursued aim will be attained. After this the ardor of many cooled off somewhat. The enthusiasm is no more so sweeping, but neither is the opposition now so sharp, so acrimonious, and a more general spread of the movement might be justly expected.

Considering the virtue of the whole question coolly and calmly from the viewpoint of an impartial judge, one finds that the underlying principle of the controversy is neither new nor characteristically Jewish, but is rather of international concern and has been already discussed time and again by men of science and of general prominence.

Mankind is divided in a multitude of nations. Each nation is precisely distinguished by peculiar traits of the character, a special trend of the mind, certain inclinations and qualities, by temperament and mode of living. Each nation has a language, a literature, a history and a pride of its own. Such variety naturally causes rivalry, jealousy, envy, aversion, hostilities and wars. Civilization, however, besides religion, urges the establishment of permanent peace based upon a genuine feeling of general brotherhood. How can this end be best attained? Those who have never made a study of the human nature and still less of the nature of nations, advocate the unification of mankind. Nations should intermingle and amalgamate. Each nation should develop a character common to all. All should speak one language, confess one religion, and adopt equal habits. Mankind should be divided in homogenous groups, not in different nations. The cause for rivalry would be removed and peace assured. But the anthropologist, the ethnologist and the general thinker hold that such uniformity is by no means desirable; on the contrary, it is detestable and abhorrent. Harmony is not monotony, the charm of beauty lies in the variety of colors, symmetry is not to be found in sameness. Mankind reduced to one cast would be intolerably tiresome. Besides, such unification is absolutely impossible. The variety of nations is due to natural causes. The difference in the climate, the variance in the hue of the sky noticeable in different parts of the world and the appearance and the conditions of the land and water that constitute the various countries all tend to create variously disposed and differently gifted groups of mankind, so much so that if, in spite of the hereditary traits and features which lie in the blood and cannot be eradicated, mankind would be artificially unified, nature would in course of a few generations again produce the same variety of the former times. To secure peace it is necessary that each nation should develop its own character in its own ways, by its own means, and that all should learn to respect each other, each should learn to value the virtues of the others and to overlook the shortcomings of the other. This is exactly the platform of religion. What can best secure peace? Disarmament, say the laymen; increase of armament, say the statesmen.

The Jewish people have all peculiarities of a separate nation; but, as they live among other nations, they are compelled by the force of circumstances, or forced by the will of the majority, to emulate the life of others. In so doing they represent a special specimen of half Jew and half Gentile, or neither Jew nor Gentile. As such they must offend others and in return be offended themselves, which is deplorable and a constant cause for aggravation and regret. Reinstatement of the Jewish people in its old home, let them develop what is best in them in their own way, by their own means according to their own traditions, and the world at large will be as much benefited as the Jews themselves and all will share in the blessings of permanent peace and in the blessings of Heaven.

It is not expected, nor desirous, nor even possible that all Jewish people should remove to Palestine. The largest population which that country accommodated when at the pinnacle of its fame and prosperity was estimated at between seven and eight millions, while the present number of Jewish people all over the world is calculated to be eleven million. During the last eighteen centuries that country was practically a desert and could be again colonized and cultivated only by degrees. Besides, it is well known that even while Palestine was the land of Israel a large number of Jewish people selected various other countries for their permanent domicile and settlement. Even then the Jewish people were living in the territory that is now comprised in the German empire. It is claimed that in Prague a Jewish community flourished already in the days when the second Temple was still standing in its full beauty and glory.

The Zionists have no more ardent wish than that all who are satisfied and happy in the respective countries where they live might prosper, thrive and enjoy the privileges granted to them in the fullest measure. The Jew is by nature grateful, patriotic, true to the core and liberal. He deserves, by right, not only protection but also full recognition, respect and equality. Those who have labored and acquired these inalienable goods of citizenship certainly value them and are undoubtedly justified, nay, even duty bound, to defend and guard them anxiously and jealously. But for that very reason the more fortunate should be fully alive to the crying need of millions of their own flesh and blood who are not granted sufficient space in this world to stretch their cramped limbs but are doomed to breath the impure, contaminated air of overcrowded quarters and narrow alleys. For that very reason should they be cognizant of the constant stream of emigrants who must be directed in a systematic and wise manner in order to avert calamities, and who could nowhere be made so happy, so self-respecting and self-supporting as in the land of their love which is the object of their prayers six times every day. The better situated should equally be sensitive to the mental anguish of those who feel themselves isolated, scorned and are tired of knocking at doors without finding admission; they should also have a heart and a mind for the dignity and the good name of the nation or brotherhood of which they consider themselves an important part. Besides, assisting in the work of Zionism they would be themselves spared of a burning feeling of shame which they invariably experience whenever they meet by chance with a wretched, unhappy, ridiculed immigrant.

To make an end of so much trouble, worries, unhappiness and disgrace there is but one effective means—lend a helping hand in building up a legally secured home in Palestine for the Jewish people, assist in the work of the Zionists, confess and embrace Zionism.

In Baltimore Zionism has a very strong footing, and its beneficial influence is everywhere strongly felt. Three years before Herzl made his first appearance, a "Zion Association," of the nature of "The Lovers of Zion," was here organized, and the writer of these lines was made president of the same. That association did good work right from the start. Assistance was regularly sent to the colonies in Palestine that needed aid, especially the colony Mishmar Hajordan, a subsidiary of considerable amount was sent to the Hebrew school in Joppa, where the Hebrew language is used as the only medium to impart general instruction and knowledge, and 1,000 francs were also sent as a contribution to the "Loan Association," founded there among the colonists for the aid of the farmers. In 1897 the writer was sent as delegate to represent the association and Baltimore at large to the first Congress in Basel. He was then the only delegate from America. He was sent again to the Fifth Congress in 1901, when there were fifteen delegates representing this country. Political Zionism created in Baltimore a number of societies, and all did strenuous and efficient work in spreading the idea broadcast, selling shares of the Jewish National Trust, selling stamps for the increase of the national fund, and collecting the shekel for the defray of the expenditure of the Congress. Both the Trust and the Fund are now well established and ready for the use of practical work in Palestine.

For the present there exists here a Council of Baltimore Zion Associations, of which the writer is president and H. Kellman secretary. The Council comprises the Zion Association, Dr. S. Schaffer, president; the Esrath, J. L. Isaacs, president; the Tikvath, S. Applefeld, president; the Daughters of Zion, Fannie Berman, president; the Ohabei Zion, G. Cohn, president; and other societies which are but loosely connected with the Council.

The Baltimore Zionists are especially fortunate for the reason that the worthy President of "The American Federation of Zionists" is one of our foremost citizens, Dr. Harry Friedenwald.

CHARITIES OF BALTIMORE JEWS

REV. DR. A. GUTTMACHER.

IN describing the efforts and activities of our age, a prominent place must be assigned to charitable endeavors. The whole subject of charity is being carefully studied in all its aspects. Methods of dispensing charity are being thoroughly scrutinized. Men and women are trained to be charity workers, to devote their time and energies to alleviate suffering and poverty, in keeping with those methods, which are proving most effective. The aim of modern charitable endeavor is not only to cure, but to prevent poverty and all ills that result from it. In far-off days Moses, the great lawgiver, decreed: "Thou shalt open thy hand wide unto thy brother." Moses makes the cause of the poor, of the widow and fatherless, and of the stranger, the cause of each and everyone who is able to render assistance. Everyone was obliged to give a tenth of his income towards the relief of those in distress. As life became more strenuous, and civilization more complex, the sages in Israel devised new means and methods to deal with the growing demands for succor. Private charity was gradually replaced by organized communal effort. Josephus thus tells of overseers in Jerusalem who directed the work of giving relief to the needy. The Talmud also states that it was customary to make collections during divine services for the different philanthropic societies, that charity-boxes were found in every synagogue and in some of the private houses. The synagogue became the center of all charitable activity. When charity became more diversified in purpose, semi-independent bodies sprang up outside of the synagogue, to which, in course of time, the synagogue delegated most of its benevolent functions. Thus Israel Abrahams, in "Jewish Life in the Middle Ages," tells that in the thirteenth century societies were organized all over Europe for supplying food and clothing, for the education of poor children, for giving dowders to portionless girls, for nursing orphans, for visiting and aiding the sick, for sheltering the aged, for lying-in women, for free burial and for the ransoming of prisoners.

In Baltimore, Jews had settled in the middle of the eighteenth century. The purchase of a plot of ground in 1786 for a cemetery would indicate a community of some size. After the Jews were enfranchised in Maryland, in 1826, a congregation was chartered. The congregation cared not only for the religious well-being of its members, but, following the usage of European countries, looked after the poor and the needy. For over two decades the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation (Madison Avenue Temple) did the work that was later done by different benevolent societies.

HEBREW BENEVOLENT SOCIETY

With the increase of immigration, congregations multiplied, and it was found advisable to create agencies which would deal exclusively with the needs of the poor and the sick, the orphans and the friendless strangers. The first society established was the Hebrew Assistance Society in 1843. In 1856 this society was re-organized on broader lines, under the name of the Hebrew Benevolent Society. Mr. William S. Rayner was the first president. This society has a most honorable record of usefulness. It supplies rent, coal, clothing, transportation, finds employment, and distributes milk and eggs to those suffering from tuberculosis. During 1908 3,351 families were helped, at a cost of $26,563.53. Up till five years ago a large sum of money was raised for the support of this society by holding an annual banquet. But the expense that the banquet entailed upon the society led to the discontinuance of it. In the beginning of this year, under the presidency of Prof. Jacob H. Hollander, many innovations were introduced, so that the society is doing its work according to the best scientific methods. Mr. S. Barroway is the superintendent. The offices of the society, at 411 West Fayette Street, are open daily.

HEBREW LADIES' SEWING SOCIETY

The Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society was organized in 1856; Mrs. Bernard Stern was its first president. Among the many good and pious women who gave their best energies to the furtherance of the aims of the society, Mrs. Betsy Wiesenfeld deserves a most honored place. For thirty-two years she was the master-hand that guided the society. Besides supplying garments, groceries are given free of charge. During the past year $5,291.07 was spent by the society. The members meet Monday of each week. Mrs. Emma H. Stein is the president, and Mrs. Hannah Grinsfelder the honorary president.

HEBREW HOSPITAL AND ASYLUM ASSOCIATION

Hebrew Hospital and Asylum Association was organized as early as 1859, though actual work did not begin until 1868, when the building on East Monument Street, that had been provided by the Hebrew Benevolent Society, was dedicated and thrown open to the sick and the aged. Mr. Joseph Friedenwald was the first president. After serving sixteen years he was succeeded by Benjamin F. Ulman. Upon his demise, Mr. Menka Friedmann, who had been connected with the institution since its establishment as a director, was chosen president. For seventeen years, until the day of his death, Mr. Friedmann was an indefatigable and enthusiastic worker. He was succeeded by Dr. Samuel L. Frank, who died in 1906. As a loving tribute to his memory, his widow, Mrs. Bertha Rayner Frank, offered a large sum of money to the association, to be used in the erection of a modern hospital. The dedication of "The Samuel Leon Frank Memorial Hospital" in 1908 marks a new epoch in the annals of the association. The new building made it possible to carry out what had been the intention of the board for many years, i. e., the placing of the sick in a building wholly separated from the home for the aged. By the use of bequests left to the institution by friends, notably that of Nathan Schloss, the public wards and outlying boiler and laundry buildings were constructed. Under the very able management of Dr. Harry Adler, who has been the president since 1906, the institution is taking a foremost rank among the hospitals of the city. It has a training school for nurses, a dispensary and an out-door dispensary.

During 1908 one thousand cases were admitted to the hospital, total number of operations 830; in the dispensary 12,155 patients received treatment, and 20,034 prescriptions were filled. On the visiting staff are the very best medical men of the city. Dr. Charles Bagley, Jr., is the medical superintendent, and Dr. Jos. A. Seligman is the chief of dispensary. Mr. A. S. Adler, the present secretary, has been connected with the institution, as treasurer and secretary, since 1869. Mrs. Ma-thilda Strouse is the president of the Ladies' Auxiliary.

HEBREW ORPHAN ASYLUM

In 1872 the Hebrew Orphan Asylum opened its door for the reception of orphans. The ground had been donated by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. S. Rayner, and a big fair was held to pay for the building. Mr. Alfred S. Ulman was the first president. About ninety children are cared for, who attend the public school and receive religious instruction in the orphanage. The Hannah U. Cahn Memorial Building—the gymnasium—was given by Bernard Cahn in memory of his wife, and the orphan children make most excellent use of it. The Manual Training School was founded by Mrs. Bertha Rayner Frank, and has proven very useful. The president is Mr. Leon Lauer, and Rev. S. Freudenthal is the superintendent. With the institution is connected the Ladies' Orphans' Aid Society, rendering most valuable service. Mrs. M. Bornheim is president of the auxiliary.

FREE BURIAL SOCIETY

The Free Burial Society started its beneficent activity in 1869. Mr. S. Fiteman was the first president. For many years the society filled a most-needed want in the community, looking after the interment of the poor. Of late the demands made upon the society have been few, owing to the many congregations and chevras which take care of the poorer brethren. The society received, a few years ago, a legacy of about $30,000 from the estate of Nathan Schloss, the interest of which is sufficient to meet the running expenses. Mr. Philip Joseph is the president of the society.

JEWISH CONSUMPTIVE HOSPITAL

One of the most recent additions to the charities is the Jewish Consumptive Hospital, located on the Westminster Pike, about twenty miles from Baltimore. The hospital was incorporated in 1907, but did not begin work until 1908, a few weeks after the dedication of the Epstein Memorial Building on June 11, 1908. Building and grounds were paid out of the munificent sum given by Mr. Jacob Epstein. Mr. Epstein, at the time when he made the offer of the gift, stipulated that the hospital should be taken care of by special subscriptions for three years, so that it may be no burden upon the federated charities. Twenty-four gentlemen most generously subscribed the necessary funds for the running expenses, and the hospital became a fact. The Epstein Memorial Hospital takes care of twenty-six advanced cases of tuberculosis. Another red-letter day in the history of the institution was October 25, 1908, when the Solomon Kann and the Samuel and Emma Rosenthal Cottages were dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The former is the memorial gift of three devoted sons. These two cottages take care of fourteen incipient cases.

The buildings are surrounded by a beautiful undulating country. The hospital owns seventy-nine acres. Part of the land is under cultivation, supplying the institution with fruit and vegetables. It is the intention of the board to have, in the near future, its own herd of cows. The hospital is carried on according to the Jewish dietary laws. The patients are examined at the Phipp's Dispensary by the resident physician of the consumptive hospital. Due to the liberality of two gentlemen, Messrs. A. Brager and Sig. Kann, the hospital has been enabled to extend its usefulness by engaging a visiting nurse to look after patients in their own homes. Dr. Harry Friedenwald is the president, Louis H. Levin, secretary. Dr. S. W. Merritt is the resident physician, and Miss Florence Hunt the head nurse.

HEBREW EDUCATION SOCIETY

Besides caring for the needs of the poor and indigent, sick and aged, the Jews of Baltimore look after the spiritual welfare of their poorer brethren. Thus, in 1852, was called into existence the Hebrew Education Society, for the purpose of educating poor and orphan children. The school started with twenty-seven children, and has now over 350 children, who receive most excellent instruction in Hebrew and religious branches. For many years the late Rev. A. Kaiser was the president of the society, and it was due to his untiring efforts that the society weathered successfully many storms and is now the owner of a fine school building, corner of Aisquith and Jackson Streets. In connection with the school is a good library of Hebrew books. Dr. Harry Friedenwald is the president, and Dr. S. Benderly the superintendent, of the school.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN

The Council of Jewish Women has proven to be a most useful and important factor in the charity work of the city. The council started the Milk and Ice Fund in 1896, which spent, in 1908, $3,560. Mrs. Isidor Ash, president. The Hospital Guild furnishes flowers to the Jewish sick in the various hospitals. The Guild for Crippled Children endeavors to make happier the lives of the poor little sufferers. Also divine services are held, under the auspices of the council, in the various penal institutions, and it is the hope of the council that a regular chaplain may be engaged to look after the spiritual and religious wants of those in the various penal and reformatory institutions.

JEWISH EDUCATIONAL ALLIANCE

Since 1890 settlement work with girls and women has been done by the Daughters in Israel, and with boys by the Maccabeans, since 1896. As both societies needed developing on broader and more modern lines, it was deemed wise to consolidate all the settlement work. The consolidation was accomplished on November 1, 1909, under the name of the Jewish Educational Alliance. The Maccabeans went out of existence, turning over its holdings to the new organization, and the Daughters in Israel will confine itself solely to the keeping up of the Working Girls' Home (1200 East Baltimore Street). Mrs. Hiram Wiesenfeld is the president of the Daughters in Israel, and the Hon. Lewis Putzel is the president of the new organization.

FEDERAL JEWISH CHARITIES

Not only a new chapter, but a new epoch begins in the Jewish charities in the formation of the Federated Jewish Charities. After a great deal of preliminary work, the federation began actual operation January 1, 1907. The purpose of the federation is to make, through one central agency, collections for the various charitable societies that have federated, to discourage and to discountenance the raising of money by balls, banquets, theatrical performances, etc., and finally, to protect the community from the launching of unnecessary benevolent schemes. In brief, the federation endeavors to give intelligent and wise direction to the charitable impulse of the community. During the short time of its existence the federation has proven the wisdom of its projectors. Twelve societies are federated. Prior to federation, $47,000 was the maximum sum collected for one year; this year it looks as if the $100,000 mark will be reached. The federation has become the chief representative of the Jewish community, exerting its moral influence for the social and economic betterment of the city. Dues of $35 entitle to membership in all the societies. The report of 1908 shows 1,800 subscribers. To Prof. Jacob H. Hollander, the first president, and Louis H. Levin, Esq., the secretary, the marvelous success of the federation is largely due. Eli Frank is the present presiding officer. The offices of the federation are 411 West Baltimore Street.

UNITED HEBREW CHARITIES

The success of the federation of the up-town charities led to a similar federation of the down-town charities. In December, 1907, the charities in the eastern section of the city united under the name of the United Hebrew Charities. During 1908 about $30,000 was collected from 3,481 subscribers. The dues range from twenty-five cents upwards, and are collected monthly. Mr. Solomon Ginsberg is the president, Samuel T. Silberman the secretary. Offices are located at 111-113 Aisquith Street.

To the United Hebrew Charities belong the following seven organizations:

1. Hebrew Children's Sheltering and Protective Association, organized in 1900, and presided over since its inception by Mr. Gerson Schwartz. The society takes care of more than 100 children. Due to the munificence of Mr. M. S. Levy, the philanthropist, a fine building, in memory of his wife, is about to be dedicated on North Broadway. P. S. Shochet is the secretary.

2. Hebrew Friendly Inn and Aged Home, founded in 1891. This institution is doing most excellent work in giving a home to the aged, and food and shelter to the friendless stranger. Thirty-four old men and women are well cared for in the home, and during 1908 10,219 strangers were fed and sheltered. Mr. Adolph Kress is the president, Mr. S. L. Fisher secretary. The society owns its home on 111 Aisquith Street.

3. Hebrew Free School, known as Talmud Torah, organized in 1889. About 750 children receive daily religious instruction in the Talmud Torah Building on East Baltimore Street. Mr. Jonas Greenblatt is the president. One of the most earnest workers in the cause of religious education is Mr. Tanchum Silberman, a member of the board. Rabbi Rabbinovith is the superintendent.

4. Hebrew Free Loan Society, organized in 1898. This society makes loans in sums of from $5 to $50, without charging any interest. It has proven an agency for much good. $6,000 to $8,000 are loaned out yearly, and the losses are almost trifling. Mr. M. R. Selenkow is president, P. S. Shochet, secretary.

5. Immigration Protective Association, organized in 1900. During 1908

602 persons were aided. The society looks after the landing of immigrants, and directs them to their destination. Where immigrants are detained and liable to be returned, the society interests itself to secure their release. During last year only five cases were deported. Mr. M. E. Selenkow is the president, Mr. P. S. Shochet the secretary.

6. Young Ladies' Benevolent Society, organized in 1900. During the past eleven months 877 girls and women were assisted. The chief work of the organization, to which 300 working girls belong, is taking care of sick girls and of women in confinement. Miss Sara Carmel is president, Miss Mary Shaievith the secretary.

7. Ladies' Auxiliary Society, organized in October, 1908, is the amalgamation of three auxiliaries connected with the various societies. It furnishes wearing apparel, linen, etc., to the different societies. Mrs. M. Rubin is the president, Miss A. Levinson the secretary.

THE JEWS IN BALTIMORE EDUCATION

BY REV. DR. WILLIAM ROSENAU.

In a history of the Jews of Baltimore, a word is in place concerning their activity educationally in this community. The activity Baltimore Jews manifested is not confined to religious instruction, but extends into the secular realm. This fact should not be forgotten when the Jews' participation in the upbuilding of the municipality along denominational, philanthropic, commercial and professional lines is being considered. Education in its broadest sense has always been looked upon in Jewry as a treasure, without the possession of which no one is able to perform his full duties of citizenship. Hence, no city in which the Jew has ever dwelt, either in by-gone days or in the present, in other lands or in this country, can be cited but what its Jewish constituency contributed to its culture. Baltimore Jewry, therefore, by its efforts in educational directions, only helps to establish an all-prevailing rule.

Although the records are not available for the writing of a complete story about the Jews as educators in Baltimore, and whereas this article must needs deal with present-day educational interests, a few facts culled from previous times shall nevertheless be stated. Dr. A. B. Arnold was a member of the medical faculty of the Maryland University; Dr. Aaron Friedenwald a member of the faculty of the College of Physicians and Surgeons; Professor Sylvester, the celebrated English mathematician, a member of the original faculty of Johns Hopkins University, as planned by the late Dr. Gilman, and the Misses Henrietta and Bertha Szold were teachers in private schools.

In the present faculty of the Johns Hopkins University are the following Jews: Maurice Bloomfield, Ph.D., LL.D., Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology. Jacob H. Hollander, Ph.D., Professor of Political Economy. Abraham Cohen, Ph.D., Associate in Mathematics. Samuel Amberg, M.D., Associate in Pediatrics and Acting Assistant in Physiological Chemistry and Toxicology. William Rosenau, Ph.D., Associate in Post-Biblical Hebrew. Louis P. Hamburger, M.D., Associate in Medicine.

Arthur Douglass Hirschfelder, M. D., Associate in Medicine.
Aaron Ember, Ph.D., Instructor in Hebrew.
Samuel Wolman, M. D., Assistant in Medicine.
Harry S. Greenbaum, M.D., Assistant in Medicine.
Milton C. Winternitz, M.D., Assistant in Pathology.
Flora Pollock, M.D., Assistant in Gynecology.
Fabian Franklin, Ph.D., LL.D., Lecturer on Political Economy.

Since the organization of the University 16 Fellowships have been held by Jews. Twenty Jews have received the degree of Ph.D., 38 the degree of M.D., 112 the degree of A.B., and 4 that of Proficient in Applied Electricity.

In the Woman's College of Baltimore (now called the Goucher College) 17 Jewish women have received the degree of A.B.

In the University of Maryland School of Medicine the following Jews hold positions in the faculty:

Jose L. Hirsh, B.A., M.D., Professor of Pathology and Bacteriology and Visiting Pathologist to the University Hospital.
Jos. E. Gichner, M.D., Clinical Professor of Medicine and Associate Professor of Materia Medica.
Irving J. Spear, M.D., Clinical Professor of Neurology and Psychiatry.
Harry Adler, B.A., M.D., Clinical Professor of Medicine and Director of the Clinical Laboratory.
H. L. Sinsky, M.D., Demonstrator of Materia Medica.
Leo Karlinsky, M.D., Assistant in Histology and Embryology.

In the University of Maryland Law School Eli Frank, Esq., is a lecturer upon "Title to Real Property and Conveyance."

In the University of Maryland Dental Department 31 Jews have been graduated.

Among the alumni of the Baltimore Law School are five Jews.

In the faculty of the Baltimore Medical College are Dr. Sydney M. Cone (Professor of Pathology and Orthopedic Surgery) and Dr. W. B. Wolf (Clinical Professor of Genito-Urinary Diseases).

In the Dental Department of the Baltimore Medical College Dr. Sydney M. Cone is Professor of Pathology and Dr. B. Myer and Dr. W. S. Rosenheim are Clinical Instructors.

In the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery Dr. Bernard Myer is a member of the Board of Visitors, and sixteen Jews have been graduated at this institution.

In the College of Physicians and Surgeons the following Jews are among the faculty:

Harry Friedenwald, A.B., M.D., Professor of Ophthalmology and Otology.
Julius Friedenwald, A.M., M.D., Professor of Gastro-Enterology and Director of Clinical Laboratory.
Melvin Rosenthal, M.D., Associate Professor of Genito-Urinary Surgery and Dermatology.
Abraham Samuels, Ph.G., M.D., Associate Professor of Gynecology.
Alfred Ullman, M.D., Associate Professor of Anatomy and Assistant in Surgery.
Henry M. Cohen, M.D., Associate in Tropical Medicine.

In the faculty of the Maryland Medical College are Chas. L. Meyer, Ph.G., Associate Professor of Practical Pharmacy, and H. C. Hess, M.D., Clinical Professor of Dermatology.

At the Woman's Medical College Dr. Claribel Cone is Professor of Pathology.

In the Peabody Institute Mendes Cohen is a Trustee and a member of Committee on Conservatory of Music.

On the staff of the Peabody Conservatory is Louis Bachner (Teacher of Piano) and in the Preparatory Department the following are teachers of piano:

Nettie Ginsberg.

Carlotta Heller.

Rose A. Gocfine.

Selma Rosenheim.

Nine Jewesses have received Teachers' Certificates for piano, one Jew a Teachers' Certificate for violin, and one Jewess for the organ.

The following were members of School Board of Baltimore City:

J. I. Cohen, Jr. (Treasurer), 1830-1838. Emanuel H. Fried, Ward 4, 1897-1898.

H. M. Adler, 1867-1868.

William Rosenau, 1900-1910.

S. Bernei, Ward 4, 1875-1878.

The Jewish teachers in Elementary Schools are:

Grace A. Adler, No. 14.

Tillie Kahn, No. 64.

Robert Altman, No. 99.

Lawrence Kaufman, No. 83.

Grace A. Ansell.

Tillie Laubheimer, No. 82.

Mignon E. Arnold, No. 58.

Isabel Lazarus, No. 24.

Fannie E. Ash, No. 98.

Hattie R. Levin, No. 49.

Leona Baer, No. 93.

Mignon Levin, No. 79.

Florence Bamberger, S.

Hilda Louis, No. 6.

Stella H. Bamberger, No. 54.

Clara New, No. 20.

Bertha C. Behrens, No. 3.

Rose Oppenheim, No. 6.

Estelle S. Brown, No. 61.

Jennie Reizenstein, No. 61.

Julia Brownold, No. 62.

Ida E. Rosenfeld, No. 39.

Helen Cohen, No. 31.

Rena Rosenthal, on leave.

Rachel Cohen, No. 84.

Carrie Row, No. 8.

Deborah Cohn, No. 93.

Ida Sachs, No. 2.

Flora Daniel, No. 73.

Rosa Sachs, No. 40.

Olga Ehrlich, No. 27.

Lavinia Schleisner, —.

Elise Fleugel, No. 68.

Florence Stromberg, No. 4.

Helen Gans, No. 26.

Helen Stromberg, No. 70.

Flora Goldsmith, No. 81.

Martha Stromberg, No. 22.

Maud Goldsmith, No. 74.

Florence Thalheimer, No. 83.

Ray Goodman, No. 93.

Miriam Weinberg, No. 63.

Flora Gump, No. 33.

Regina Weinberg, No. 94.

Clara Herman, No. 83.

Belle Weinkrantz, No. 83.

Fannie Kahn, No. 98.

Hilda H. Wolfram, No. 66.

In the Secondary School Mr. David E. Weglein is Principal of the Western High School and Mr. Oliver Bachrach is Instructor of Mathematics at the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute. Miss Carolyn Aronsohn is a theme reader at the Baltimore City College, and Miss Irene Renier at the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute.

THE JEW IN POLITICAL LIFE

By HON. LEWIS PUTZEL

NO account of the part played by the Jews in the political life of the State would be adequate without a review of the laws affecting their political status.

Until the year 1826 a Jew could not hold a public office of any kind in the State of Maryland. Article LV of the Constitution of 1776 required every public official to "Also subscribe a declaration of his belief in the Christian religion." Article 35 of the Declaration of Rights of 1776 likewise required a declaration of a belief in the Christian religion. In the year 1795 an amendment to the Constitution was ratified removing the disabilities of "Quakers, Menonists, Tunkers or Nicolites or New Quakers." In 1824 there was an active agitation for the removal of the civil disabilities of the Jews, and what was called "The Jew Bill" was introduced in the Legislature. It was entitled "An Act for the Relief of the Jews in Maryland," and provided that "every citizen of this State professing the Jewish religion, and who shall hereafter be appointed to any office or public trust under the State of Maryland, shall subscribe a declaration of his belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, instead of the declaration now required by the Constitution and form of government of this State." This Act, known as Chapter 205 of the Acts of 1824, was passed on February 26, 1825. In conformity with the provisions of the Constitution it had to be confirmed by the next Legislature. The confirmatory Act is known as Chapter 23 of the Acts of 1825 and was approved January 5, 1826.

The Constitution of 1851, Article 34, provided "And if the party shall profess to be a Jew, the declaration shall be of his belief in a future state of rewards and punishments." Since January 5, 1826, the Jews have been qualified to hold office in this State. The passage of that Act was quickly followed by the election of two prominent Jews to the City Council of Baltimore. They were Solomon Etting and Jacob I. Cohen, Jr. The Jews have always taken an active interest in the public affairs of this State, and sent many soldiers to both armies during the Civil War. Many public offices have been filled by them with conspicuous ability.

Isidor Rayner was a member of the House of Delegates and State Senate; he was elected Attorney General of this State; was a member of the House of Representatives from the fourth congressional district for three terms, and was elected to the United States Senate in 1904, and was just reelected (1910) to succeed himself. Dr. Jacob H. Hollander, professor of political economy in the Johns Hopkins University, was secretary of the International Bimetallic Commission. His skill as a master of finance was recognized by two Presidents of the United States. President McKinley appointed him to be the first treasurer of Porto Rico. He was sent there to devise a financial system for the new colony. When the affairs of San Domingo became hopelessly involved, President Roosevelt selected him to straighten out its financial difficulties. Harry B. Wolf was a member of the House of Representatives from the third congressional district. Martin Emerich, who was a member of the Maryland House of Delegates, was afterwards elected to the House of Representatives from the City of Chicago. Isaac Lobe Strauss was a member of the House of Delegates in 1902, and was elected Attorney General of the State in 1907, an office which he is still occupying with marked ability. Jacob M. Moses was a member of the Senate in 1900 and 1902, and was appointed Judge of the Juvenile Court in 1909. Lewis Putzel was a member of the House of Delegates in 1896 and of the Senate in 1898, 1900 and 1902. He was also a member of the commission that framed the New City Charter in 1898, and was City Attorney of Baltimore in 1896 and 1897. Mr. David Hutzler is a member of the commission that is now framing a new charter for the City of Baltimore. Leon E. Greenbaum was City Attorney from 1899 to 1901. Sylvan H. Lauchheimer is now the first assistant of the City Solicitor of Baltimore. Martin Lehmayr was a member of the House of Delegates in 1900, 1902 and 1904, and was appointed an Associate Judge of the Supreme Bench by Governor Austin L. Crothers in 1909 to fill the vacancy created by the death of Judge Conway W. Sams. Rev. Dr. William Rosenau has been a member of the School Board of Baltimore City since the year 1899, when the board was reorganized under the provisions of the new charter of 1898. Augustus C. Binswanger is a member of the first branch of the City Council to which he was elected in 1907. Philip Joseph, Benjamin J. Nusbaum, Samuel Affelder, Solomon Frank, Joseph D. Seidman and William H. Weisacher have been members of the first branch of the City Council of Baltimore in recent years, and Moses N. Frank was a member of the second branch of the City Council. Emanuel H. Jacobi, Harry E. Fuld, Charles J. Wiener, Meyer D. Lipman, Mendes Cohen and M. S. Hess have been members of the House of Delegates. Myer Block has been connected with the Orphans' Court for thirty years and for the past six years has been a judge of that court and is now its chief judge. Mendes Cohen, Joseph Fridenwald, Jacob Epstein, David Ambach and many others have occupied positions on important public boards. In public office their course has been marked by intelligence, integrity and independence. They have been in fact public servants. But the holding of public office is only a minor part in the political life of a people. The main consideration is the amount of intelligence displayed in performing the political obligations of a private citizen. The political independence of the Jews is so pronounced that it is generally recognized that they are the most independent element in the community. This should be their proudest boast, that they cast their ballots intelligently and without permitting partisan prejudice to interfere with sound judgment. The ideal citizen is the man who is able to rise above personal interest and partisan prejudice to cast his ballot for the welfare of his city, State and country.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF REV. DR. S. SCHAFER

I was born May 4, 1862, in Bausk, Government Courland, Russia. In those days Courland was still a characteristic German province, although subject to Russia since 1737. The German language was the official language of the administration, in the courts and in the schools, and was also predominant among the various nationalities of the population. The German language was my native tongue and German ideals were harmoniously interwoven with my inherited Jewish conceptions and traditions. My father, Aaron, was a professional Hebrew teacher of good standing and was highly respected for his modesty and piety. My mother was a descendant of the renowned Mordechai Jaffe, who died as Rabbi of Prague, 1612, and who is famous because of his great literary work called the "Ten Garments" (Lebushim). Thirteen consecutive descendants of him in as many generations up to the father of my mother were distinguished Rabbis and served as leaders and teachers of various congregations in various countries and cities.

Thanks to the tender care of my Godfearing parents and their hereditary love for knowledge, I received a thorough and broad education, chiefly in Hebrew literature and Jewish lore, but also in secular and general branches of learning, which prepared me for my study in later years. Through the portals of the vast domain of Hebrew literature I was early and carefully led by the trained hand of my father himself.

From my earliest youth I was thus taught and accustomed to embrace with equal love and like eagerness worldly wisdom with the ancient spirit of true Judaism, and I have ever since devoted my feeble strength and moderate abilities to pacify both of them in practical life as well as in theory.

Up to the age of eighteen years I frequented various places that were famous for the seats of learning (Yeshiboth) they maintained, (where hundreds of Hebrew students gathered around renowned masters, as a rule the rabbis of the respective cities, and received ample instruction in all branches of Jewish lore. I was always quite a favorite with my colleagues because of my German habits, carriage and language, and was often goodnaturedly called briefly, the German.

In 1880 Rev. Dr. Ph. Klein, now rabbi in New York City, was elected rabbi by the Jewish community of the city of Libau, which is situated on the shore of the Baltic Sea. Dr. Klein, who was himself a scholar and later a teacher of Dr. Hildesheimer's Rabbinical Seminary in Berlin, announced, as soon as he settled in Libau, that he would gladly receive, foster, instruct and prepare young students for the said Rabbinical Seminary. This general invitation I greeted with joy and I grasped the opportunity without hesitation. During the three years I studied in Libau I found in the house of the worthy doctor and rabbi generous assistance, proper guidance and always a hospitable welcome. My gratitude, which I deeply felt for all his kindness, I humbly expressed by dedicating to him my dissertation which I wrote when I completed my course in the Berlin University.

It was destined that he and I should both come to this country, he first and I three years after.

Provided with a diploma from the gymnasium of Libau, and also with a warm recommendation from Dr. Klein, I left in May, 1883, for Berlin, where I remained until the end of 1890. Here I met at first with many difficulties and hardships, with which I had to contend before I could level my way and experience the cheer, the good humor and exultation with which the native Berlin student is invariably inspired. My parents could make no provision for my needs. I had to support myself by means of tuition by giving lessons in Hebrew, but it took some time before I made sufficient acquaintances and procured such lessons. However, divine grace never forsook me. Before long I felt in Berlin at home, and the years that followed brought me genuine satisfaction, I may say real happiness, of which I still think with an acute yearning somewhat akin to homesickness. Berlin was for me the home where I grew to manhood and where I drew in joy from the inexhaustable fountains of knowledge and science the springing waters of salvation.

I matriculated at the University of Berlin, where I devoted my time and energy to the studies of philosophy, semitics, German literature and Roman law. The latter I chose for the special purpose of comparing the Hebrew jurisprudence with that of the Romans. I studied under the tuition of Professors Sachau, Schrader, Barth, Cosack, Zeller, Von Cuny and Simmel.

At the same time I entered the rabbinical seminary of Dr. Hildesheimer, where I completed my rabbinical studies in a more systematic manner and with more scientific application than my previous instructors were used to teach.

I had thus as much food for the brains as I possibly could assimilate, and as part of my time was occupied with the work of instruction I was compelled to make use of the greater part of the night in order to accomplish my daily task without delay. However, I stood the work and the strain well and I found also time for the specific but innocent student's jollifications.

In 1889 I graduated, after passing a satisfactory examination before the Professors Delitsch, Heinze and Mauernbrecher of the University of Leipzig. The charges for the examination are less in Leipzig than in Berlin, and as the honors are equal, it is customary with the less fortunate students to ask for permission to be examined in the university of the former city. I presented before examination a quite voluminous dissertation on law and morals according to the Talmud, and received my diploma as Doctor of Philosophy.

In 1890 I graduated also from the rabbinical seminary and was equipped with a diploma as rabbi. The following year I returned to my native country, where I again submitted to the trial of close examinations and obtained formal ordination from the famous Rabbi Isaac Elehonon Spector, of Kovno, and the equally renowned Rabbi Alexander Moses Lapidus, of Rossieny.

The hardships of the examinations to which I was subjected in the house of the latter rabbi were more than mollified by the good fortune I thus had to make acquaintance with his youngest daughter, herself well read in Hebrew literature, whose love I gradually won and who finally consented to share with me equally joy and troubles.

Some trouble was still in store for me. Owing to the prevailing peculiar political conditions in Germany it was impossible for me as a foreigner to obtain there a position as rabbi, and having breathed the free air of Germany I could not make up my mind to imprison myself in the lion's den and remain in Russia, so I had to turn my attention to this country of liberty and political equality.

Again divine grace favored me in an utterly unexpected manner.

The congregation Shearith Israel, that had never before employed the spiritual aid and guidance of a rabbi, just then decided to engage a rabbi and requested Dr. Hildesheimer to recommend one of the large number of his disciples. I was heartily recommended, and before I was three weeks in this country I was unanimously elected to my present position.

I must at this place pay a debt of gratitude to my friend B. Z. Rosenbaum, who at that time made an earnest and strong effort to bring about my election. I acknowledge this fact with all my heart.

On January 1, 1893, I was installed in office and I assumed my work with zeal and thankfulness to Him who had so mercifully guided my steps and had finally granted the desire of my heart and the ambition of my soul.

Ten weeks later my then intended, Miss Anna Lapidus, arrived from the old country accompanied by one of her sisters and, March 19th, we were united in marriage in the synagogue of my assumed activities before my own congregation by the then cantor of the same place of worship.

Seventeen years have now passed since then. These were years of hard work and steady application, since I had to cope with the difficulties of a strange language I had never heard before besides my many daily duties. These were also years of some cares, worries and troubles of which we cannot and must not complain. These variations constitute an inevitable, indispensable and very important part of life itself. Sunshine and light would be but little appreciated if there were no shadows, no complete darkness, nor would joy and happiness be properly valued if there were no grief, no troubles. But I may state with gratification that these years were by no means years of disappointment. Those who uphold the banner of tradition and struggle for the perpetuation of unaltered Judaism have a difficult task in this country. Life is here by no means easy and smooth, and the average man thinks that under the burdens which religion imposes life is almost intolerable. It requires something stronger than the flow of eloquence to convince the people at large that the more readily and more willingly the burdens of religion are borne, the easier, the sweeter, the happier is life with all its material drudgeries, labors and sufferings. However, this truth is slowly but steadily spreading, and this is a great cause for satisfaction. It is a satisfaction to be on the side of the truth, although I am far from being so conceited as to believe that my exertions had in any way helped to bring about the change in the general convictions.

No less gratifying is the fact that the congregation is steadily growing, both in number and in importance. It commands the respect of the whole community of this city and it can be safely stated without exaggeration that it also stands as a model of its kind among all orthodox congregations of this country. It cannot but exercise a strong and beneficial influence and incite others to follow its example and to adopt its methods both in the management and in the mode of conducting the services. The relations between the congregation and myself are in every respect harmonious and most cordial. I love the congregation and I have strong proofs that this feeling is fully reciprocated.

Outside of my work for the congregation I also find time to take a lively interest in Zionism, which I cannot separate from Judaism.

I am blessed with a happy family life, with five good children; the oldest, who bears the name of my father, is fifteen years old; the youngest, who is named after my father-in-law, is eight years old, and three promising girls, Grace, Molly and Rose, are between the two.

I am happy and grateful to Him who protects us all.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF THE SHEARITH ISRAEL CONGREGATION.

BY REV. DR. S. SCHAFER.

THE Shearith Israel Congregation is a union of two small congregations which consolidated in the year 1879 for the express purpose of forming a stronger body that would be more able to resist the influences of Reform which at that time was steadily growing. A building was then bought, corner Greene and German Streets, and solemnly dedicated as their place of worship. L. Cotten, who was the first president, H. P. Cohn, Dr. Aaron Friedenwald, Joseph Grinsfelder, Jacob Gundersheimer, Simon Halle, Jacob Hecht, Joseph Bergman, Meier Plaut, Joseph Nusbaum, Isaac Miller, Leib Gutman, the brothers Moses, Louis, Abe and Lazer Strauss, and Moses Schloss constituted the mainstay of the Congregation, both by their material assistance and, what is a great deal more, by their noble example of faithful adherence to tradition without compromise. Soon after, Moses Strauss was elected president of the Congregation, in which capacity he served with unbounded love, devotion and dignity to the last day of his active, worthy and pious life. He expired June 20, 1905. During the first thirteen years the Congregation had no spiritual leader. The cautious servants of their Maker could find no one in this country whom they could safely entrust with their spiritual welfare. Towards the end of 1892 the Congregation wrote to Dr. Hildesheimer, in Berlin, the capital city of Germany, and requested him to recommend one of the disciples of his Rabbinical Seminary which he founded and to which he gave his entire energy and time. The present Rabbi, Dr. S. Schaffer, was recommended, and immediately elected. He was installed in office January 1, 1893. With the beginning of the new century the tendency to move to the northwestern part of the city made itself strongly felt, and equally the need of a Synagogue in that section of the city. But as most of the old members had already departed from this world, a fresh support of new members was absolutely necessary. With the untiring aid of T. Silberman the work began, and among those who heartily responded were Jacob Castelberg, Israel Levenstein, A. Greenstein, Solomon Todes, S. Singer, M. L. Bloom, J. Blum, Adler Brothers, S. Levenson, L. Lutzky, S. Markel, J. Macht, T. Baker, M. Sworzyn, B. Freedman, J. Makover, S. Rauneker, W. Flehinger and Harry Silverman. These, together with the descendants of the departed members and those who had joined the Congregation in course of the years between 1880 and 1900, among whom were Alex Cohn, Simon Neuberger, B. Z. Rosenbaum, Samuel Senker and Joseph Goldstein, formed a renewed congregation of efficient strength and means to build an elaborate and beautiful edifice. In 1903 the Synagogue on McCulloh near Bloom Street was erected and duly dedicated. Among those who joined the Congregation since then may be mentioned J. Lubin, Israel Fein, Louis Fein, S. Seliger, S. Baroway, L. Katzner, J. Miller, D. Kaiser, H. Ades, Joseph Strauss and G. Levenson. Manes Strauss, of the firm of Strauss Bros., is the present President, P. W. Gunderheimer, Vice-President, who with T. Silberman, Meyer Strauss, S. Senker, S. Neuberger, I. Levenstein, Hyman Cohn and M. Plaut constitute the Board. E. Jaffe is Cantor of the Congregation.

HISTORY OF THE BALTIMORE HEBREW CONGREGATION

(Madison Avenue Temple.)

THE Baltimore Hebrew Congregation was incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland, January 19, 1830. This was the first charter granted to a Jewish organization in Maryland. Under the laws of the State the charter could not have been granted much earlier, for up to the year 1826 the Jew did not possess equal rights in Maryland with his Christian neighbor. This explains the buying of a piece of ground for a Jewish burial place by individuals. Thus, in 1801, Charles Carroll of Carrollton sold to Levi and Solomon Etting a lot in Enson's town, near Jew Alley (near East Monument Street), to be used as a cemetery. This was the general Jewish burial ground up to 1832, when the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation bought three acres of ground on the Belair Road, in Baltimore County, for a congregational cemetery.

The first regular Minyan (public service) was established in the autumn of 1826. The service was held in the home of Zelma Rehiné, on Halliday, near Pleasant Street. The Minyan, that met in the home of Rehiné, led to the organization of the first Jewish congregation. Though "the Jew Bill," by which all disabilities were removed, had passed both Houses, the granting of the charter to the congregation, as we shall see, brought forth some opposition. In December, 1829, H. Hunt presented in the House of Delegates a memorial of "sundry citizens of the City of Baltimore," praying that they may be incorporated under the name and style of "The scattered Israelites, for the purpose of building a synagogue." The bill, entitled "An Act to incorporate the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation," was favorably reported by a committee of three members and passed on its first reading. On its second reading the bill was rejected by a decisive majority. On motion of Mr. Thomas, of St. Mary's, the vote of the House was reconsidered, and the bill was passed January 19th. A few days later the Senate acted favorably. The charter members were: John Maximilian Dyer, Lewis Silver, Levi Benjamin, Joseph Osterman and Moses J. Millem.

In early years the congregation was familiarly referred to as "The Stadt Schul" (the City Synagogue). The congregation outgrew its quarters every few years. At first it occupied a room, corner Bond and Fleet Streets, over a grocery; then in 1832 it moved to North Exeter Street, near what is now Lexington Street. In 1835 the congregation occupied an one-story dwelling on High Street, near the bend, between Fayette and Gay Streets. In 1837 a three-story brick dwelling, corner of Harrison Street and Etna Lane, was acquired by the congregation. The money for the building was raised by the members, and the ground was donated by its owner, Levi Benjamin, who was one of the charter members and served many years as treasurer. The congregation worshipped on Harrison Street until the completion of the synagogue on Lloyd Street, in 1845. The synagogue was dedicated on September 26th, and, being the first event of its kind that had ever taken place in Maryland, it attracted much attention. The services were conducted by Rabbis Samuel M. Isaacs, of New York City, and Isaac Leeser, of Philadelphia, and Abraham Rice, the rabbi of the congregation. In 1860 the synagogue had become too small and its seating capacity was materially enlarged. Beginning about 1880, a number of Jewish families had moved into the northwestern section of the city, and it became necessary for the congregation to locate up-town. It was largely due to the untiring efforts of Dr. A. Bettelheim, the rabbi of the congregation, that the Madison Avenue Temple, corner Madison Avenue and Robert Street, was built. The new temple was dedicated with elaborate ceremony on September 25, 1891. Dr. Bettelheim having died before the completion of the temple, Dr. A. Guttmacher was elected his successor. The architecture of the temple is Byzantine. The cost of it is $150,000.

The early membership was largely made up of Jews coming from Holland, especially of those who had previously emigrated to the West Indies. In 1835 many German Jews came to Baltimore and soon outnumbered the Portuguese and Dutch Jews. In 1832 the congregation had 29 members, 41 in 1835, 59 in 1839, 112 in 1849, 148 in 1860. The organization of the congregation was largely due to John M. Dyer, a charter member and the first president. Thus, also, the building of the synagogue on Lloyd Street was brought about by the energy of his son, Leon Dyer, who served seven years as president.

The first regularly ordained rabbi of the congregation was Abraham Rice, who came here from Wuertzburg, Germany, in 1840. Up to the time of his death he was the acknowledged champion of uncompromising orthodoxy. Rev. Dr. Henry Hochheimer, one of the first rabbis who had received a university training in Germany, was the second rabbi of the congregation, from 1849-59. He was followed by Rabbis Illoway, Hofman, Fluegel, Bettelheim and by the present incumbent, Rev. Dr. A. Guttmacher, who was elected in 1891. The cantor of the congregation is Rev. J. Schwanenfeld, who succeeded Rev. J. D. Marmor in 1904.

The officers of the congregation are:

MOSES FRANK	President
MAX GREIF	Vice-President
SODY SALABES	Treasurer
SOLOMON PREISS	Secretary

Members of the Board:

SIMON ROSENBERG	LEOPOLD EISEMAN
DR. SIDNEY CONE	LOUIS FEDERLEICHT
JACOB B. CAHN	ISAAC DAVIDSON

The congregation maintains a Sabbath School, which is attended by 250 children, in charge of ten paid teachers.

OHEB SHALOM CONGREGATION.

BY REV. DR. WILLIAM ROSENAU.

The Oheb Shalom congregation, worshipping in the Temple located at the northeast corner of Eutaw Place and Lanvale Street, was organized in 1853. Its formation was prompted by the desire on the part of its charter members to see the moderate reform tendency represented in Baltimore Jewry. The initial meeting of the congregation was held October 1, 1853. The late Julius Stiefel was elected president; Simon Cohen, vice-president; Moses Oettinger, treasurer; and M. H. Weil, secretary. The committee, appointed at that time to select an appropriate place of worship, recommended the third story of Osceola Hall, at the northeast corner of Gay and Lexington Streets, at which place the first divine service of the congregation was conducted in the latter part of November. The first Reader was the lately deceased Isaac Hamburger, who officiated regularly, until Cantor Alt-meyer was elected.

Although the new organization was not looked upon with favor by the parent body, the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, from which it had seceded, and did not enjoy the good-will of sister institutions, the reasonable platform, which Oheb Shalem had laid down for itself, coupled with the unabated enthusiasm of its constituents, soon tended to increase its ranks. Like all other congregations at that time, Oheb Shalem realized the necessity of possessing a cemetery, and, therefore, the purchase of a tract of land on the Trapp Road, beyond Canton, was effected.

While the congregation had reason to be satisfied with its steady growth, it justly felt that the permanence of its movement lay in the exposition of the religion of Israel. It was, therefore, determined that a Rabbi should be engaged, and only such a one who combined within himself Rabbinical and scientific training, so that he would be in a position to preach the traditions of Israel as illumined by the conclusions of the newer school of thought. The first preacher to occupy this newly created position was Rev. Salomon, who, arriving in this city in 1854, immediately introduced, on the Feast of Weeks of that year, the confirmation of boys and girls, regarded in those days an important step toward reform. During Salomon's incumbency, Abram Lissner became the Cantor of the congregation, and, upon Salomon's retirement in 1856, S. M. Landsberg was chosen his successor. During his administration many changes were made in the ritual—changes which, for the most part, consisted of the omission of unimportant prayers.

The year 1858 marks a new era in the life of the congregation. Oheb Shalom had outgrown its first home. An imposing church, located on Hanover Street below Lombard, was purchased, remodelled and dedicated by the Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati. Landsberg had resigned his position as Rabbi and the congregation immediately proceeded to bring to this country from Europe a Rabbi, who was to become a leader in American Israel. For quite a while the hope of procuring the celebrated Dr. Abraham Geiger was entertained. He could not, however, be persuaded to come to the new world. Dr. Benjamin Szold, a young man of scholarship and promise, having the endorsement of the Dean of the Rabbinical Seminary at Breslau, was later elected to fill the vacancy. In September, 1859, Dr. Szold arrived in this country, and the Sabbath on which he delivered his inaugural sermon was an occasion of marked historical significance in the community.

Standing, as Dr. Szold did, for moderate reform and meeting with success, both immediate and constant, it is not surprising that he met with opposition in various quarters. Dr. Szold's influence was felt not only by his own congregation but also in the community at large. Soon after his arrival he planned a prayer book, "Abodath Israel," which was in accordance with the needs of the times, and supplanted in many congregations throughout America the ritual then in use.

In 1866 the Rev. Alois Kaiser, a pupil of the famous Sulzer, was brought to America as Oheb Shalom's Cantor. Szold and Kaiser worked together for several decades—the former exerting a telling influence upon the Jewish life of the community by means of the spoken and written word, the latter by means of musical compositions reflecting the spirit of Jewish idealism in song. During Szold's and Kaiser's administration many justifiable innovations were introduced, all of which had but one object in view, namely, the greater beauty and inspiring character of the divine service.

While much credit for the steady spiritual growth of Oheb Shalom must be bestowed on these two faithful servants of the Lord, who, alas, have gone to their eternal reward, its institutional prosperity must be attributed to the energy and wisdom of Isaac Strouse, who has been President for the past thirty years, and who has always enjoyed the earnest co-operation of men like the late Vice-President William Schloss, the present Vice-President, Henry Sonneborn, and efficient Boards of Directors. It was during Mr. Strouse's presidency that many important movements were launched, among which the construction of the present handsome Temple, representing an investment of $260,000, is the most important. The cornerstone of the Temple was laid on June 29, 1892; and on September 3, 1892, Dr. William Rosenau, the present incumbent, was installed as Rabbi to succeed Dr. Szold, whom the congregation pensioned on account of declining health. Upon the death of the late Alois Kaiser, the present Cantor, Rev. Jacob Schuman, was chosen.

No sketch of the history of the congregation would be complete without mentioning the valuable contribution made to its growth by the excellent choir the congregation has always maintained.

Since September, 1893, marking the removal of the congregation to its present home, its constituency has grown to such an extent that the seating capacity of the building, amounting to 1,950, is almost entirely rented.

The congregation belongs to the so-called "Moderate Reform" wing of the Synagogue.

Among its educational activities the following should be noted. It maintains a religious school meeting every Sunday, with an enrollment of 225 pupils. Its curriculum covers a course of eight years, and in it the several grades are taught by experienced salaried teachers. A post-confirmation class is in existence for the purpose of getting the young people together for the study of current Jewish topics. Two Bible classes are conducted. In addition to educational activities, the ladies of the congregation maintain an auxiliary society.

CHIZZUK AMOONAH SYNAGOGUE

THE Congregation "Chizzuk Amoonah" was organized in April, 1871. Dissatisfied with changes made in the ritual of the old Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, at that time worshipping on Lloyd Street, a loyal band of gentlemen, who were determined to adhere to the traditional usages and to abide by the prescribed ritual as they received it from their ancestors, secured a hall on North Exeter Street at the call of the late Judah Rosewald, beginning their religious services with twenty-five members. Mr. Rosewald was the first president; Mr. Jonas Fridenwald, vice-president; H. S. Hartogensis, secretary; Philip Herzberg, treasurer, and Mr. S. Nussbaum and N. Kaufman. There they continued to meet for five years, after which time a synagogue was erected on Lloyd Street. Rev. Dr. Schneeberger, of New York, was invited to dedicate the new synagogue, and a month later, in September, 1876, he received a call from the congregation and was elected rabbi, preacher and superintendent of the school. Rev. L. Heilner was made cantor, and, after his death, Rev. Herman Glass, the present incumbent, was elected as cantor. Mr. Rosewald, the first president, was succeeded by Mr. Jonas Friedenwald; at his death, September, 1893, his son, Dr. Aaron Friedenwald, became president, who in turn, in August, 1902, was succeeded by Mr. M. S. Levy, the present incumbent. In the year 1895 the congregation moved to its present place of worship, on McCulloh and Mosher Streets, a building that cost $60,000.

The present officers are:

MR. M. S. LEVY.....	President
DR. HARRY FRIEDENWALD.....	Vice-President
MR. BENJAMIN FRIEDMAN.....	Treasurer
MR. MILTON FLEISCHER.....	Secretary

The Board of Managers is composed of:

MR. WILLIAM LEVY	MR. LOUIS H. LEVIN
MR. SIGFRIED NEUBERGER	MR. EMANUEL HECHT
MR. LOUIS STEPPACHER	MR. MAX COHN

School Board is composed of:

DR. HARRY FRIEDENWALD
B. FRIEDMAN
S. NEUBERGER

ACTIVITIES OF THE CONGREGATION

1. Congregational School daily for study of Hebrew.
2. Free Sunday School. Total number of pupils, 80.
3. Ladies' Auxiliary Association.
4. Junior Auxiliary Society of young ladies, with a membership of 83.
5. Monthly lectures by prominent speakers, and occasional addresses from leading rabbis of the country.

Henry W. Schneeberger.

REV. DR. HENRY WILLIAM SCHNEEBERGER

Rev. Dr. Henry William Schneeberger, who is identified with the Chizuk Emunah Congregation over thirty-four years, was born in the city of New York in September, 1848, the son of Regina and Sigmund Schneeberger, a well-known merchant. At an early age he showed a strong inclination for the ministry, an inclination fostered by his father, who saw to it that his son should receive a thorough education and training under the best teachers. Rabbi Schneeberger received his secular knowledge in the public schools of his native city, at Columbia Preparatory School, under Dr. Anthon, and took a course at Columbia College, where he obtained the degrees of B.A. and M.A. Technical studies were conducted under the late Mr. Sachs and Professor Newman of London. After graduating from Columbia he went abroad to attain a rabbinical knowledge at the seminary of the late Dr. M. Lehman of Mayence for some time, when he left for the city of Eisenstadt, Hungary, where the late Dr. I. Hildesheimer presided over his rabbinical college, and then followed him to Berlin, where he spent two years at the theological seminary Dr. Hildesheimer established; here he obtained a thorough training, and here he received his rabbinical diploma from Dr. Hildesheimer. While in Europe he attended the universities of Jena, Berlin and Vienna. Returning to New York in 1872, Dr. Schneeberger was elected rabbi and superintendent of the congregation Poel Zedek. In 1876, as above stated, he received a call to his present congregation in Baltimore, whose pulpit he occupies to this day.

On October 20, 1901, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his connection with the congregation was celebrated by the members of the congregation and the public in general. Addresses were made by Dr. Aaron Friedenwald, Rabbis Dr. Rosenau, Dr. Guttmacher and Hon. Isaac Lobe Strauss, the latter representing the former pupils, who are numbered by the thousands. During his stay in Europe Dr. Schneeberger wrote "The Life and Works of Rabbi Yehooda Hanasi," contributed articles to the "Jewish Messenger" and the "American Hebrew of New York"; "The Rabbi and the Young People" (Activities of the Rabbi), a translation of "Plessner's on Prayer." Dr. Schneeberger's activities were not confined to his congregation. He was for a number of years president of the Education Society, has conducted the education of the immigrants in this city from their very first arrival, and has been for years the superintendent of the night school of the above society; has been a member of the advisory board of the New York Theological Seminary, is a director of the Alliance Israelite Universelle of the Baltimore branch, is a member of the advisory council of the "American Jewish Committee," a member of the executive committee of "Orthodox Jewish Congregations of the United States and Canada," and is the secretary of the Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society of Baltimore. In April, 1882, he was married to Miss Sarah Nussbaun, daughter of the late Rabbi Charles Nussbaun, of New York City.

REV. DR. WILLIAM ROSENAU

Rabbi William Rosenau, Ph.D., was born at Wollstein, Germany, May 30, 1865. His father was the cantor of the Jewish congregation of the place. A few years later, his father removed to Hirschberg, in the province of Silesia, where William attended the elementary school and the Gymnasium. In 1876 he came to this country with his parents, who settled in Philadelphia. There he attended the public schools, and received his early Hebrew training from his father, the late Revs. George Jacobs, H. Polano and Sabato Morais. In 1882 he was sent to Cincinnati to take up his theological training, graduating with the degree of B.A. from the University of Cincinnati in 1888, and being ordained Rabbi by the Hebrew Union College in 1889. His first charge was Temple Israel, Omaha, Neb., where he remained from 1889 until 1892. In 1892 he came to Baltimore to take charge of the spiritual welfare of the Oheb Shalom Congregation, as successor to the late Dr. Benjamin Szold. After seventeen years of service at the Eutaw Place Temple, he was only recently re-elected to serve the congregation in that capacity for five years more, ending September, 1915. On August 2, 1893, Dr. Rosenau married Miss Mabel Hellman, of Omaha. In 1900 Dr. Rosenau received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the Johns Hopkins University, for special studies in the field of Semetic languages. Immediately after his graduation from this institution he was made Instructor in the faculty, in which he now holds the position of "Associate in Post-Biblical Hebrew." Dr. Rosenau has held a number of public positions. He has been second Vice-President of the Central Conference of American Rabbis from 1895 to 1896, Corresponding Secretary of the same organization from 1903 to 1905, a member of the Board of Education of the city of Baltimore from 1900 to 1910, and he is now the Vice-Chancellor of the Jewish Chautauqua Society. In addition to many sermons, published in separate form, and articles printed in various journals, he has written the following: "Semetic Studies in American Colleges," "Hebraisms in the Authorized Version of the Bible," "Jewish Ceremonial Institutions and Customs," "Some Ancient Oriental Academies," "Jewish Biblical Commentators," the "Sedar Haggadah," "History of Congregation Oheb Shalom," "Principles of Education Among Jews During the Rabbinical Period," and a translation of the "Book of Esther" for the forthcoming English edition of the Bible to be issued under the auspices of the Jewish Publication Society of America. Dr. Rosenau contributed articles to the "Jewish Encyclopædia," an article to the "Encyclopædia Biblica," was editor of the Jewish Comment in its early days, was an editor of "Young Israel," and edited, together with Dr. Guttmacher, two numbers of the Year Book of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, and the Conference's "Synod" publication.

REV. DR. ADOLF GUTTMACHER

Adolf Guttmacher, son of Manheim and Dorothea Guttmacher, was born in Germany, January 7, 1861. His father was a merchant, a State Elector, and noted for his piety. Adolf's education began in an elementary school, later he attended the Jewish Boys' School and the Jewish Teachers' Seminary, in Berlin. His education was continued in this country (to which he came in 1884) at the University of Cincinnati, the Johns Hopkins University and the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati. He graduated from the University of Cincinnati and the Hebrew Union College in the same year, 1889. He attended the Semetic Graduate Department of Johns Hopkins University, where he received the Ph.D. degree in 1900. Dr. Guttmacher has also received the degrees of B.L. and Rabbi. From 1889 to 1891 he was Rabbi at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and from 1891 and at present Rabbi of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. Rabbi Guttmacher has written "Optimism and Pessimism in the Old and New Testaments" and the "Sabbath School Companion." His preferred reading is the Bible and the works of Goethe and Emerson, and he is a great lover of music. Rabbi Guttmacher's recommendations to mankind are "Honesty and diligent application." On June 14, 1892, Dr. Guttmacher married Miss Laura Oppenheimer, and he is the father of three children.

REV. DR. CHARLES A. RUBENSTEIN

Charles A. Rubenstein, Rabbi of Har Sinai Congregation, was born in Riga, in the year 1870. He is the son of Isaac and Frieda Bliden Rubenstein. In 1883 he came to this country and entered the public schools at Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1887 he began his studies at the University of Cincinnati, from which he graduated in 1891 with the degree of Bachelor of Letters. In the meantime he had been received in the Hebrew Union College, from which he likewise graduated in the year 1891 as rabbi. In the same year he received a call from the Reform Congregation B'nai Israel at Little Rock, Ark., where he remained until 1897. During his ministry in Little Rock the Reform Congregation greatly increased in membership. A new Temple was built and dedicated under his direction in 1896.

Feeling that his labors in Little Rock had been completed, Rabbi Rubenstein resigned his charge the following year to devote a year entirely to his studies. He matriculated at Columbia University, New York, as a post-graduate student in philosophy, and in June, 1898, received the degree of Master of Arts. In May of that year he received a call from his present congregation, Har Sinai.

Rabbi Rubenstein has taken great interest in civic and philanthropic movements both in Little Rock and in Baltimore. He has for a number of years served as a director of the Female House of Refuge and the Instruction Visiting Nurses' Association of this city and of the Hebrew Orphan Home of Atlanta, Ga. In 1902 he was a member of the Citizens' Committee that received Prince Henry of Prussia on his visit to Baltimore.

Chamberlin Metal Weather Strip is more than a weather strip. Let us mention a few of the things it was designed to do and does. Our strip is not an experiment, a fad nor a luxury, but an economical necessity, a fact proven by a record of over one million and a half windows equipped in this country up to the present time. Every claim we make for the Chamberlin Metal Weather Strip we stand ready and anxious to back up to the very last with the hard, irrefutable proof.

It is not a weather strip of wood, or rubber, or tin, or other material calculated to wear and grow impotent with use. There is nothing in its entire make-up that wear and usage can affect to any degree. Made entirely of zinc, bronze, copper, brass, it is proof against the vagaries of the weather.

REV. JACOB SCHUMAN

I. ISAACS

Ladies' Tailor and Habit Maker

320 NORTH CHARLES STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The above is a facsimile of the gold medal awarded to Mr. I. Isaacs at the National Style Show and Convention, Washington, D. C., 1910, for excellency of style, workmanship and originality.

Mr. Isaacs established the ladies' tailoring business March 1, 1898, at 210 West Lexington St., but on account of the great success of the business and a need of more commodious quarters the present location at 320 N. Charles St. was leased. Mr. Isaacs is a ladies' tailor of high reputation, having had long experience in both general and artistic lines of his work and it is safe to say that he occupies as high a position in the esteem of his patrons as any other ladies' tailor in the city.

SOUTHERN BEDDING COMPANY

BRANCH OF ROME METALLIC BEDSTEAD CO., OF ROME, N. Y.

629-631-633 W. PRATT ST.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Southern Bedding Company was established in December, 1907, and is a branch of the Rome Metallic Bedstead Company of Rome, N. Y. The line carried by this house consists of brass and iron beds, cribs, bed springs and couches. The offices and warehouse are at 629 West Pratt Street, and the States which are supplied from the Baltimore branch are: Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and District of Columbia, which territory is constantly traveled by five salesmen. The reputation of the "Rome Productions" is national in scope.

PIKESVILLE DAIRY CO.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Pikesville Dairy Co. was established in 1871 by C. Lyon Rogers, Sr., Eugene Backford, Sr., and Charles J. Harrison, Sr., all large farmers of Pikesville, Md., who went into the milk business to find a market for the product of their own herds. All the original members of the firm are dead, and the business is to-day conducted by their sons. The Pasteurizing and distributing plant of the Pikesville Dairy is located at Argyle Avenue and Smith Street, where is maintained one of the most scientifically equipped establishments for the handling of milk in the country.

On arrival at our distributing plant in Baltimore the milk is subjected to three examinations:

1st. A daily practical examination by two inspectors who have been in our employ over ten years. This is to determine if the milk is sweet, clean and fresh.

2d. A chemical examination to determine the nature and the quality of the milk, and to see that it is absolutely free from any foreign substance, such as preservatives, etc.

3d. A weekly bacteriological examination by Dr. Standish McCleary, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, as to the healthfulness of the milk we receive and sell. His reports are on file and open to the public. This is a radical innovation in the handling of milk in Baltimore.

The Pikesville Dairy Co. handle Milk, Cream, Buttermilk and Ice Cream, and forty wagons are required to handle its constantly increasing business.

McGINNIS DISTILLERY

"McGINNIS" PURE RYE

BALTIMORE, MD.

The A. McGinnis Company was established in 1901 by the late Arthur McGinnis, the capacity being increased from time to time until 1906, when, due to the increase of business, the original frame structure distillery was demolished and the present fire-proof distillery was erected in its place. The present distillery has a capacity of 1,000 bushels daily, capable of producing a yearly output of 20,000 barrels on the season's run of eight months. The distillery is one of the most modern, improved and perfect plants in Maryland, and is open to the public at any time. It is surrounded by sixteen acres of land. The water is of excellent quality, and, together with the natural surroundings, we are able to produce the finest Maryland Rye. The A. McGinnis Company has largely a local trade; however, we are now shipping in all directions of the compass, and "McGinnis Pure Rye, Bottled in Bond," can be found in most every city in the United States, and has been favorably passed upon by some of the best connoisseurs.

THE NATIONAL EXCHANGE BANK

OF BALTIMORE

The National Exchange Bank of Baltimore was organized in 1865 and has enjoyed forty-four years of uninterrupted progress, and to-day, whilst it is one of the youngest banks in the city, ranks as one of the largest and strongest.

The management has been of the very best from the beginning.

The first president of the bank was Daniel Miller, founder of the present house of Th. Daniel Miller Co.

Our second president was John Hurst, the founder of the present house of John E. Hurst & Co.

The third president was W. T. Dixon, founder of the Dixon-Bartlett Co., who was president for twenty-five years.

The fourth president was Summerfield Baldwin, of Woodward, Baldwin & Co., who resigned on account of his company requiring his undivided attention. He is now vice-president, Waldo Newcomer having succeeded him as president.

This brings us down to the present time, when we find the bank at its most prosperous stage. Mr. Newcomer, for several years having been closely connected with the best financial institutions in the city, is capable and experienced, and the bank has bright prospects of continued progress. R. Vinton Lansdale, the cashier, has been with the institution since 1882, and is a man of wide banking experience and ability.

The list of officers is completed by C. G. Morgan, assistant cashier, who was recently appointed.

SCHANZE'S MODERN DRUG STORE

PENNSYLVANIA AND NORTH AVENUES, BALTIMORE, MD.

This business was established in 1895 by Mr. F. W. Schanze at the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Cumberland Street. Later Mr. Schanze moved to his present magnificent establishment at the corner of Pennsylvania and North Avenues, which is one of the best equipped and up-to-date drug stores in Baltimore City. The progress of this business has been along lines of conservative enterprise and consistent integrity. The scope of this business may be inferred from the fact that the services of four registered pharmacists are required to handle its far-reaching patronage.

SOUTHWEST CORNER GILMOR AND SARATOGA STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Peter Schmidt Vienna Bakery, Gilmor and Saratoga Streets, which is one of the largest bread producers in the city, began its career in a very modest way. Peter Schmidt, the founder, was a man of energy and fortitude as a baker, and had a far-seeing eye as to what might be attained in the handicraft of which his vocation was a part, and surrendered himself faithfully to the end of getting along, and this resulted, as is with most cases of applied brains and energy, of producing a plant in his life of large proportions; but just when his ambition had favored him most, his career was ended, and it fell to the sturdy manhood of his boys to carry out this monumental project securely founded by him, until to-day they have made a name famous the town over and coupled two popular breads, known to everybody as "Sweet Home" and "Crusty," as their leading products.

EDWARD L. GERNAND, General Agent, 211 North Calvert Street.

THE SUBURBAN CLUB.

Dedicated November 7, 1901. Located Park Heights Avenue and Slate Avenue, eight miles from Baltimore.

Fifty-four acres of ground and a club house costing nearly $200,000. Forty-five thousand dollars was borrowed from the banks and about $50,000 from the members. The former has been somewhat curtailed and the latter is in the nature of debenture bonds.

The value of the land has doubled and has developed into a magnificent retreat.

The membership to-day is much larger than at any time in its history, numbering 500 active members, 100 lady members and 100 non-resident members, which is fully 100 per cent. more than at the time of starting.

The principal sports are golf, baseball, football, tennis, and recently a bowling-alley at a cost of $10,000 was added through the voluntary contribution of the members. The project was conceived and carried forward to completion by Samuel Rosenthal, who is, and has been, the president since the club's founding.

While there have been changes in the Board of Directors from time to time, the present board consists of Samuel Rosenthal, president; Leon E. Greenbaum, vice-president; Edwin B. Hutzler, secretary; Eli Hecht, treasurer, and Emanuel Hecht, Caesar H. Rosenheim, Simon Frank, Eli Strouse, Leon C. Coblens, Samuel Rice and Isaac Kemper.

FURST BROS. & COMPANY

"Furst Line—Second to None"

The world-renowned house of Furst Brothers & Company was established in 1890; the members of the firm to-day being Charles H. Furst and Max Nusbaum. The original location of this business was 213 W. Camden Street, and the enormous growth of the business of this company may be readily realized when we state that it now ranks as one of the largest plants of its kind in the world, doing business not only in this country but all over Europe and extending into Asia and Africa. Furst Brothers & Company are Manufacturers of Mirrors, Frames, Mouldings and Pictures. The mill and factory are located at the intersection of Ostend, Race and Leadenhall Streets, and are equipped with every modern mechanical device calculated to save time and reduce cost of production. More than 200 persons are employed in the various departments, including a corps of skilled designers, all of which have been combined to justify the motto of this house "FURST LINE—SECOND TO NONE." The firm maintains its own freight yards, and with the proposed deepening of the basin will be enabled to ship directly from its own wharf to any port in the world. Sales Department (wholesale only) is located at 38 Hopkins Place, between Lombard and German Streets, where a complete line of samples of their product are always on display in charge of capable salesmen.

JOSEPH S. WERNIG

"All White Labor"

General Express and Transfer Company

106 WEST LOMBARD STREET

BALTIMORE, MD.

This business was established January 1, 1897, by Joseph S. Wernig, at the age of twenty years, beginning with one team, which he drove himself. By personal solicitation he found hauling work for his one sorrel horse and truck—he secured later a contract from McCormick & Co. to do their hauling. This necessitated the purchase of a second team, and probably the proudest distinction in Mr. Wernig's successful career is that he has retained the hauling and confidence of his first customer to the present day. From this time on business grew by leaps and bounds until reaching the mark of "1 to 61" teams, which to-day has been increased to 101 teams—the largest equipment of any transfer company in Baltimore—and have on hand any kind or style of wagon. On September 6, 1909, Mr. Wernig made a contract with the New York and Baltimore Transportation Co., and since then with the Maryland & Pennsylvania Railroad and the Chesapeake & York River Lines, to do all their transferring of freight, and these contracts likewise he has retained unto the present time.

The business grew so large that it became necessary to incorporate it under the title of "The Jos. S. Wernig Transfer Co.," consisting of Jos. S. Wernig and the business of Wernig Bros. The policy of this business has been "to give the best transfer service possible to the merchants of Greater Baltimore." The stables, which are owned personally by Mr. Wernig, cover a half acre of ground and accommodate one hundred and twenty-five head of horses. Mr. Wernig operates his own paint shop, blacksmith shop and feed mill. Only white labor is employed.

R. MILTON NORRIS

516 AND 518 WEST BALTIMORE STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

This is one of the oldest established houses in the line of carriage and wagon makers' supplies. The business was founded in 1790 by Thos. Mackenzie. Later the firm became C. T. & C. B. Mackenzie & Son. The present firm is located in the four-story brick buildings at 516-518 West Baltimore Street, of capacious dimensions, and have greatly enlarged and increased facilities for carrying on the largest wholesale and retail automobiles, carriages and rubber tires; manufacturer of carriage and automobile trimmings, and carries the largest local stock of oak and hickory wagon and automobile repairs; iron and steel cloth and carpets. Mr. Norris's business covers a very large territory in and out of Baltimore, in which territory he is represented by corps of efficient salesmen. One of the important reasons for the success of this house is that it makes a specialty of filling and shipping all orders the day they are received.

The manufacturing end of the business has been greatly added to in point of facility and equipment in the past two years, forming a strong combination, back of which is efficient service and integrity in all business dealings.

Piet-Robertson-Rainey Co., on March 1, 1904, succeeded the old established firm of Edward Jenkins & Sons. The members of this company are: Wm. A. Piet, T. P. Robertson, P. H. Rainey and Edward Stinson. Messrs. Piet-Robertson-Rainey Co. were for many years actively connected with the old house of Edward Jenkins & Sons, and Mr. Stinson is president of the Edward Stinson Manufacturing Company, doing a large business in wheels and wheel materials. The original location of the business was 637 and 639 West German Street, but from need of greater facilities the firm moved to, and are now occupying, the commodious warehouse at No. 108 South Howard Street. Piet-Robertson-Rainey Co. are engaged in the wholesale carriage and saddlery materials business, carrying at all times a full and complete line of standard goods in their line, and by reason of their large and well-assorted stock have gained a wide reputation for the prompt fulfillment and shipment of orders. The house has traveling representatives in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia, and are noted for fair dealing, prompt attention to orders and for their standing guarantee of goods and prices sold by them.

THE JEWISH HOME FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Federated Jewish Charities of Baltimore, held April 11, 1907, it was announced that Mr. Jacob Epstein offered to give the sum of $25,000 for a tuberculosis hospital, providing the Federation would undertake its support, and at the same time he offered an annual contribution of $500 toward the support of the proposed institution. A committee consisting of Dr. Harry Adler, Simon H. Stein and the president was appointed to investigate the practicability of erecting such an institution for the sum offered. It was found it would not suffice, whereupon Mr. Epstein made his contribution $35,000.

The original subscribers to the support of the Jewish Home for Consumptives are: Jacob Epstein, Albert A. Brager, Louis Kann, Sigmund Kann, Max Skutch, Moses Goldenberg, Alexander Hecht, Abraham G. Hutzler, David Hutzler, Ephraim Macht, Eli Oppenheim, Isaac Oppenheim, E. Rosenfeld & Company, Strouse & Bros., Joel Gutman & Co., Schloss Bros. & Company, M. S. Levy & Sons, Joseph Friedenwald, Jacob Castelberg & Son and Goldenberg Bros.

On June 7, 1907, the Jewish Home for Consumptives was incorporated, and for a time the management of the corporation was placed in the hands of a Building Committee, consisting of Albert A. Brager, Louis Kann and Benno Kohn.

Seventy-two acres of land were purchased on Westminster Pike, near Reisterstown, for a sanatorium.

On October 25, 1908, the Solomon Kann Memorial Cottage and the Samuel and Emma Rosenthal Cottage were opened for the reception of ten patients in the incipient stages of tuberculosis.

OSTEOPATHIST

OFFICE, 319 NORTH CHARLES STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Osteopathy is a drugless system of treating disease and a bloodless system of surgery, the results of which are accomplished through scientific manipulations, readjustments of the parts of the human body and overcoming abnormalities of structure, allowing a free flow of fluid and nerve force to every part of the body, thus restoring harmonious function throughout the body and producing health.

The source of health is within us, not without: a diseased body needs something done to it, not something put into it. All bodily disorders are the result of mechanical obstruction to the free circulation of the vital fluids of the body.

THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY

INCORPORATED

The Consolidation Coal Company was formed under a special Act of the Maryland Legislature passed in 1860. Shortly afterwards it acquired the property of the Cumberland Coal & Iron Company and later that of the Ocean Steam Coal Company and the Frostburg Mining Company.

In 1864 it acquired the majority shares of stock of the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and later acquired all the stock of said company. In 1903 it acquired the entire capital stock of the Canal Towage Company, operating a fleet of canal-boats between Cumberland, the Eastern terminus of the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Railroad, and Washington, thus completing a part of its plan to control the entire movement of its coal from the mines to tide-water.

In 1903 the company acquired the majority of the capital stock of the Fairmont Coal Company and Somerset Coal Company. During the year 1909 it acquired the entire stock of the said two companies.

It controls, through ownership of the majority of its capital stock, the Metropolitan Coal Company of Boston, who own large storage facilities for handling coal in Boston and New England markets.

handling annually about 700,000 tons of coal. It also owns the majority of the capital stock of the North Western Fuel Company, which company in turn owns large storage facilities at the head of the Great Lakes, handling over its docks annually about 2,500,000 tons of coal.

The company recently acquired about 30,000 acres of fine coal land in the State of Kentucky, which it is at present developing. It is also constructing a railroad from a connection with the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad up Millers Creek to the town of Van Lear, at which point the mines now being developed are located. It is expected to begin shipping coal from this region about January 1, 1910.

The main offices of the company are located in the Continental Building, in the City of Baltimore, Md., and its president and board of directors are the following well-known men:

HISTORY OF THE COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN.

The Baltimore Section, Council of Jewish Women, was called into being May 1, 1894, by Mrs. Bertha Frank, who had the Rev. Dr. A. Guttmacher to preside over the initial meeting, with the following appointed officers: Honorary president, Mrs. Bertha Rayner Frank; president, Mrs. Jacob I. Cohen; vice-president, Mrs. A. Guttmacher; secretary, Miss Rose Summerfield; treasurer, Mrs. Eli Strouse. Of these officers only one of the charter officers, Mrs. Eli Strouse, still holds position as an executive officer.

The membership of the section in the year of its incipency rose from seventy-six to 194, in the second year to 246, in the third year to 324, in the fourth year to 333. In 1908 it had 561 members.

The Study Circles commenced with one class; until now there are six circles, with a membership of seventy-five, either studying the Bible or Jewish history.

The objects of the Council are: To bring about closer relations among Jewish women; to furnish by an organic union a medium of communication and a means of prosecuting work of common interest; to further united efforts in behalf of Judaism by supplying means of study; to further united efforts in behalf of social reform by the application of the best philanthropic thought.

MADAME PAULINE KOHLERMAN

Human Hair Goods,
Toilet Preparations, Hair Dressing and Manicuring

Manufacturers of "Nonpareil" for Restoring Gray and Faded Hair

S. W. CORNER OF EUTAW AND MULBERRY STS.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Madame Pauline Kohlerman founded this business in 1870, having served her full apprenticeship and learned the hair business thoroughly under the late Madame Jeanerette. Since the death of Mme. Kohlerman, the business is being managed by her son, Mr. John N. Kohlerman, who had been associated with her in conducting same for twenty years, and who, consequently, has a most thorough knowledge of the business in all its details, being considered one of the most expert manufacturers and judges of human hair in the country. Associated with him in the management is Miss Pauline Kohlerman, his sister, who gives her personal supervision to the hair dressing, manicuring, massaging and sales' parlors, where the best of service is always to be had. A complete line of first-class, scientifically prepared human hair goods, also a select line of fancy Toilet Articles, Hair Tonics, Dyes and Cosmetics, are consequently on sale. The Hair Dressing, Manicuring and Massaging Parlors are conducted in a thoroughly modern manner with a proficient and competent corps of experienced attendants. The famous "Nonpareil" for restoring gray and faded hair to its natural color and lustre and the celebrated "Eau de Quinine" tonic for the hair and scalp are manufactured at this establishment. The laboratories and factory are thoroughly sanitary, and equipped with modern devices for manufacturing the highest grade of hair goods and hair preparations. The mail order department extends its operations to all parts of the United States, and frequently shipments are made as far as the Pacific Coast, full descriptive catalogues being mailed free to anyone on request, through which medium quite a large mail order business is done, both retail and wholesale. The policy of this establishment is to offer the very best and latest styles, to give prompt and satisfactory service, and the fullest values at all times, and it enjoys the confidence of a large circle of patrons.

BIG VEIN POCOHONTAS COAL CO.

GENERAL OFFICES

1214 CONTINENTAL BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MD.

The Big Vein Pocahontas Coal Co. was established on the 25th day of March, 1909, the original members of the firm being Thomas T. Boswell, Michael Sheehan, Richard S. Garrett, Edward T. Boswell, Frank A. Furst, E. P. Keech, Jr. The president was the organizer of the Merchants' Coal Co. and was president and general manager of that company for fifteen years, but resigned a short time ago to give his entire attention to the development of this company. The mines of the company are situated at Pocahontas, Va., and the general offices are at 1214 Continental Building, Baltimore, Md. The Big Vein Pocahontas Coal Co. are miners and shippers of the celebrated Pocahontas coal. This coal is mined from the No. 3 Seam, running from twelve to eighteen feet in thickness. This company took over the old Browning Mines, which had a capacity of about 350 tons per day, and have since erected on this same property a modern plant guaranteed to handle 3,000 tons per day. The Big Vein Pocahontas Coal Co. is now fulfilling contracts awarded by the United States Government to supply coal to the Norfolk Navy Yard for the use on the nation's battleships. This award was made on a guaranteed analytic test of 14,800 British Thermal Units, on which the company is collecting a premium on account of its superior quality.

GOODY ROSENFELD

EICHENGREEN & CO.

BOOTS AND SHOES, ALSO AGENTS FOR THE HOOD AND OLD COLONY RUBBERS.

WILLIAM EICHENGREEN, FOUNDER

This firm was originally established in 1869 by Wm. Eichengreen and his brother David, and continued until July 1, 1884; then the firm changed to Eichengreen & Weil and continued to January 1, 1903. The present style of the firm is Eichengreen & Co., the members of which are Irvin Eichengreen and Sigmund M. Adler. The original location of this business was 22 West Baltimore Street, from which location it moved to 49 West Baltimore Street, then to its own building at 113 West Baltimore Street.

Recently, however, owing to the increase of business, Eichengreen & Co. have occupied the magnificent warehouse at 109 German Street. Eichengreen & Co. are wholesale dealers in boots, shoes, and also represent the famous "Hood & Old Colony" rubbers. The trade of this house extends over a wide territory and it enjoys an enviable reputation for enterprise and fair dealing.

E. FLEISCHER & SON

HAIR GOODS AND PEARL BUTTONS

BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established in 1885, but had been preceded by Mr. E. Fleischer, who began the wholesale business in 1859. The former members of this firm were Emanuel Fleischer, Samuel E. Fleischer and Silas M. Fleischer, who successfully conducted the wholesale hosiery, gloves, underwear and notion business for a long period of time. Mr. Emanuel Fleischer was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1826, while his two sons were born in this country. Since the deaths of Mr. Emanuel Fleischer and Samuel E. Fleischer the business has continued under the firm name of E. Fleischer & Son by Mr. Silas M. Fleischer, and the business was changed to that of wholesale hair goods, etc. The large trade of the present concern is not only local, but extends into the far South and West. Owing to integrity and fair dealing this business has met with a marked success.

HEBREW EDUCATION SOCIETY.

ASQUITH AND JACKSON STREETS.

In 1903 the Hebrew Education Society bought the property at Asquith and Jackson Streets. To-day the school consists of ten school-rooms, a library, office, janitor's room, bath-room, a cloak and wash room and a covered yard, accommodating 200 children.

The rooms of the first floor are separated from each other by folding doors, so that by opening the folding doors the classrooms are converted into a small hall, seating about 200 children. This building is used for the purpose of Jewish education.

The curriculum covers a period of seven years from the age of six to fourteen. It includes the following studies: Hebrew, Liturgy, Bible, Apocrypha, Mishnah Talmud, Midrosh, Jewish Mediaeval Poetry, Neo-Hebrew Literature, Commentaries, History, Biography, Ethics, Singing.

At the present time there are over three hundred pupils, divided into twenty-one classes, seven teachers and one superintendent. The annual expense is about $5,000, but the society bears only a part now, almost half being covered by the tuition of the pupils.

During the past year there has been established a preparatory department for the training of Hebrew teachers.

COUNCIL MILK AND ICE FUND.

Eleven years ago the Council Milk and Ice Fund came into existence through the urgent need of the afflicted during the summer season.

These conditions were largely brought about by the great number of sick and ill-fed babies, the aged poor and the tubercular cases.

The policy has been, where applicants can pay the wholesale price of milk to make arrangements with the dairy to supply them with the same price that the Fund would have to pay.

The payments are made directly by them to the dairy, and such cases do not appear on the Charity List.

The work is supervised by five directors, assisted by a very able corps of workers, all of whom give their labor free.

The city is divided into districts. All reports and applications for assistance are made to the president, who immediately informs the district worker, who investigates, and if worthy provides the applicant with tickets for the month.

CARTER, WEBSTER & COMPANY

Wholesalers and Jobbers of Hosiery, Underwear, Gloves,

White Goods, Laces, Embroideries and Small Wares

13-15 HANOVER ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

Established January 1, 1889, by W. J. Carter, F. L. Webster and Dr. J. S. Woodward. On January 1, 1909, F. B. Horsey and J. T. Jones were admitted to the firm. This firm has an extended trade covering a large southern and adjacent territory, handling standard lines of hosiery, underwear, gloves, white goods, laces, embroideries and small wares, and operate their own factory at Seaford, Del., where they manufacture work-shirts and overalls, known throughout the country under the brand names of "Clifton" and "Dixie."

Carter, Webster & Company were burned out by the fire of February 7, 1904, and pending the rebuilding of their building were located at 311 N. Howard Street.

THE BALTIMORE BRANCH OF THE ALLIANCE ISRAELITE UNIVERSELLE.

On the evening of May 12, 1888, a meeting was called at the residence of Dr. Aaron Friedenwald to arrange preliminaries for organizing the Baltimore Branch of the Alliance Israelite Universelle. Dr. Aaron Friedenwald called the meeting and Dr. Cyrus Adler explained the aims. Others present were: Rev. Szold, Dr. Schneeberger, Dr. Kaiser, Joel Gutman, Julius Friedenwald and B. H. Hartogensis.

The circular was drafted, giving a concise account of the purposes of the Alliance Israelite Universelle to be signed by the local rabbis and heads of the congregations.

About seventy-five persons assembled on June 10, 1888, in the synagogue of the Oheb Shalom Temple on Hanover Street for the purpose of organizing the Baltimore branch of the Alliance Israelite Universelle. Dr. Friedenwald called the meeting to order, and the following officers were elected: President. Dr. Aaron Friedenwald; Vice-President. Rev. B. Szold; Treasurer, Mendes Cohen; Secretary. Hugo Steiner.

The purpose of the Alliance Israelite Universelle is to educate the Jews in benighted lands where education is denied them. It provides schools where governments do not maintain them, and that for girls as well as for boys. It teaches trades to both sexes, and prepares boys for farm life under proper auspices. Many of its pupils are so poor that they must be provided by the Alliance with a midday meal.

The principal business is to make the condition of our downtrodden co-religionists in Southeastern Europe, in the far East and in Africa better and more endurable so that they need not give up their homes and emigrate. It procures for them, where possible, civil and religious liberty, renders them assistance in dire distress, whether caused by persecution or by mobs. It is a veritable Jewish Order of the Red Cross.

The Alliance expends large sums of money, aggregating $250,000 a year, for these purposes.

The Baltimore branch merely contributes its portion to the general fund.

Other branches of the Alliance Israelite Universelle are in New York, Pittsburg and Philadelphia.

It carries a full and complete line of Rubber Goods, Boston and Bay State Rubber Footwear, Tennis and Outing Shoes, Waterproof Clothing of all kinds, Hose, Beltings, Packings, Druggists' Rubber Sundries of all descriptions, representing in this territory the Peerless Rubber Company, The National India Rubber Company, The Boston Rubber Shoe Company. The liberal policy of the Maryland Rubber Company has won for it high reputation throughout its territory and accounts for the successful position it now holds, its business methods, as well as quality of its goods, coupled with prompt and efficient service, being generally and generously recognized by its trade.

SKETCH OF THE PURIM ASSOCIATION.

The Purim Association originated through the action of Mr. Joseph Friedenwald, who wished the Harmony Circle to give an annual mask ball for the benefit of charity, which the circle declined to do. He then called a meeting at the vestry rooms of Hanover Street Temple on November 23, 1868, for the purpose of arranging for an annual Purim Ball, which meeting was attended by the most influential Hebrews of Baltimore.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Friedenwald, and he proposed Col. Goody Rosenfeld for president of the organization, the election of whom followed. The membership of the Association was limited, and the net proceeds were applied to the benefit of the Hebrew Hospital and the Hebrew Orphan Asylum alternately.

The officers were:

MILTON C. DAVIS

Mr. Milton C. Davis began business on his own account in 1891, prior to which time he was superintendent for the old established building contracting firm of John Stack & Sons. Mr. Davis has his office in the new Builders' Exchange Building, 15 East Fayette Street. Of work which he has done reference is made to the following:

Cottage for Mrs. M. L. Brinkman, Catonsville, Md.; cottage for Mr. Herman Bernheimer, Arlington, Md.; bakery for J. H. Von Drelle, Baltimore, Md.; buildings for Mayor and City Council: No. 25 engine-house, No. 7 engine-house, No. 15 truck-house, No. 10 school. Forest Park school, Clifton Park bandstand, factory at City Jail, patrol stable on Frederick Street. Warehouses and stores: Dr. Friedenwald, 117 North Howard Street; Julius Wegner, restaurant and café, 9-11 North German Street; A. C. Meyer & Co., 118 West Lombard Street.

D. S. SCHAFER

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL PLASTERING AND STUCCO WORK

BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Schaffer began business in 1891 at 314 Roland Avenue and now maintains his office at 15 East Fayette Street. Some of the most important work in the city of Baltimore has been intrusted to Mr. Schaffer, including such important work as: Hebrew Hospital, Hamburger's Store building, Henry Sonneborn & Co.'s building, St. Joseph's Home of Industry, Gayety Theater, New Monumental Theater, Pearce & Scheck's Theater, Harlem Park Church, Samuel Ready School, Gayety Theater, Toronto, Canada; U. S. Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va.; Evans Building, Washington, D. C.; Star Theater, Weehawken, N. J.; Public School No. 153, Washington, D. C.

THE CHLORIDE OF SILVER DRY CELL BATTERY COMPANY

407-409 NORTH PACA STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

It is our purpose to call the attention of the medical profession to the extraordinary progress which has been made of recent years in the manufacture of electro-medical apparatus. A good medical battery is as essential to the needs of modern therapy as is the antiseptic or the hypodermic. In short, it is absolutely indispensable.

In the selection of such a battery the vital question is briefly this: Which are the most desirable and essential features and what objectionable points should we seem to avoid? Other advantages being equal, it stands to reason that a neat, light, compact instrument, capable of being carried from place to place without inconvenience and free from offensive gases, the elements of which cannot spill and ruin the clothing, would instantly recommend itself to the careful and discriminating physician. The chloride of silver dry-cell batteries as manufactured by us fulfill these requirements to the letter, and many more.

A. E. JONES

MANUFACTURER OF ICE CREAM

SOUTHEAST CORNER PATTERSON PARK AND FAIRMOUNT AVENUES

This business was established in 1909 by Mr. A. E. Jones, who has had long experience in the ice cream business. The plant is located at the southeast corner Patterson Park and Fairmount Avenue, and is equipped with every mechanical and sanitary device for the manufacture of high-grade ice cream. The success which Mr. Jones has achieved since he began business on his own account is evidenced by the fact that he employs, according to season, six to eleven men and requires three delivery wagons to handle his output. Mr. Jones' policy is to make trade and keep it by giving the best quality of ice cream at a fair price and treating all of his patrons with equal consideration.

HEBREW HOSPITAL. MONUMENT STREET AND HOPKINS AVENUE, MADISON AND REGESTER STREETS

The Hebrew Benevolent Society erected a building in 1867 for the care of indigent and sick, and on its completion transferred it to the Hebrew Hospital and Asylum Association, chartered in 1868 for this purpose.

The original building was extended in 1886 and the new addition used exclusively as a hospital and the original building as a home for males and females. At present, since the erection of the Samuel Leon Frank Memorial Hospital in 1908, the entire building has been fitted as a Home.

The new Memorial Hospital also fronts on Monument Street and accommodates 100 patients in private rooms, wards, children's wards, etc.; two operating rooms, a nurses' training-school room and offices on first floor. The basement is fitted up as a free dispensary, where 1,500 patients are treated monthly.

There is also an outdoor clinic, where patients are visited in their homes by the doctors and treated free of charge.

A large tent was erected, where babies were treated in the open air. This will be repeated on a larger scale next summer.

The officers of the Hebrew Hospital are:

President	DR. HARRY ADLER
Vice-President	JULIUS GUTMAN
Treasurer	SAMUEL FRANK
Secretary	A. S. ADLER
Medical Superintendent	DR. CHAS. BAGLEY, JR.

HANLINE BROS.

23 & 25 HOWARD ST., AND 30 S. LIBERTY ST.

BALTIMORE, MD.

A most important and thriving element of industrial activity in the city of Baltimore is the manufacture of ready-mixed paints and the sale of all the articles that come under the head of painters' supplies. One of the oldest houses thus engaged was established by Mr. Maurice Hanline in 1848, on Bond Street, in the eastern section of the city. It was here that he brought up his three sons to a knowledge of the business, Leon M., Alexander M. and Simon M. Hanline, who succeeded him in 1882. The death of Leon M. Hanline occurred February 8, 1897. The trade which their father had made and the new trade which they soon commanded combined to largely increase the business and to widen the house's trade relations throughout the country, particularly in Maryland and adjacent States, where it principally centers to-day. This necessitated enlargement of the works or removal elsewhere; consequently the property at the southeast corner of Liberty and Lombard Streets was secured and equipped with the best improved machinery for the manufacture of ready-mixed paints. Their latest removal to present warehouses at 23 and 25 Howard Street and 30 South Liberty Street, with the opening of factory, 99 x 150 feet, at the corner of Sharp and Stockhelm Streets, occurred about five years ago. Since their first introduction, paints bearing the brand "Hanline Brothers" have been steadily improved and withstood the severest tests, especially in sections bordering on the Chesapeake Bay and Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. Fishpaw enjoys a most extensive patronage among the large builders, corporate interests and property owners, and there is no work so large in character that he cannot handle it with facility and promptness, as he maintains an equipment and a corps of workmen which has no superior in this section of the country.

TERMINAL WAREHOUSE, PAINTED BY ELI L. M. FISHPAW. OVER 700 GALLONS OF PAINT USED ON THIS CONTRACT

HEBREW FREE BURIAL SOCIETY.

Up to 1869 there was no society that looked after the burial of our poor co-religionists; therefore a number of people solicited enough money to bury them, the Benevolent Society furnished only one carriage and Mr. Riely furnished the hearse free of charge. The number of deaths increased, and several advertisements in the paper brought the following Israelites together at Raine's Hall, in January, 1869: I. Fiteman, Simon Kohlenstein, Israel Posninsky, Philip Joseph, A. Rothschild, Jacob Goldenberg, Fentel Hess. S. Fiteman was elected president and Philip Joseph secretary and treasurer.

These men instituted the Hebrew Free Burial Society of Baltimore City.

The three congregations, the Sloyd Street (now the Madison Avenue Temple), the Eden Street and the Hanover Street (now the Entaw Place Temple) gave the society a grave free of charge in rotation.

This continued for over fifteen years, until Mrs. Jonas Friedenwald donated a lot to the society in the Hanover Street Cemetery, which lot the society exchanged for four large lots in which the poor were buried.

A number of legacies from co-religionists ranging from $25.00 to $500.00. Among the first donations received was $50.00 from the Beacon Lights Literary Society and $50.00 from the Miriam Lodge.

A great deal of trouble was experienced in obtaining dues. Mr. Nathan Schloss left a large legacy so that the society could be protected. The most active workers and those participating in nearly all funerals for many years were Israel Posninsky, Dr. Gerson and Simon Lowenthal.

The present officers are:

MOSES WOLF, FOUNDER

M. WOLF & SON

M. Wolf & Son was established in 1867 by Mr. Moses Wolf, who has the distinction of being the first Hebrew engaged in the insurance business in Baltimore, prior to which time Mr. Wolf was in the wholesale clothing business under the firm name of Wolf & Bergman. Mr. Wolf conducted the fire insurance brokerage business until the year 1892, when the firm name was changed to M. Wolf & Son, by reason of Mr. Harry M. Wolf being taken into the firm. The original office of this business was at South and German Streets, and its present location is 30 Commerce Street. Mr. Moses Wolf died eleven years ago, since which time the business has been conducted by the son. M. Wolf & Son are general insurance agents and brokers, and cover every line of the business. Mr. Harry M. Wolf has the distinction of being the first and the only active Hebrew member of the Baltimore Board of Fire Underwriters, M. Wolf & Son representing the following companies:

AN ACCOUNT OF MRS. BETSY WIESENFELD AND HER FATHER, JONAS FRIEDENWALD.

From the Jewish Exponent, February 14, 1890. Loaned by Mrs. Rosie Wiesenfeld Rosenfeld.

For many years one family more than all others in Baltimore has been remarkably prominent because of its activity in the Hebrew charities. Three generations of the Friedenwald family to-day play important rôles by their contributions of time and money in alleviating distress, more especially among the unfortunate of their own creed. And if anyone who is acquainted even in a small way with local history were asked if there is among Jewish ladies a central figure, he would have no hesitancy in pointing out Mrs. Betsy Wiesenfeld, a member of the second generation, as pre-eminent among a host of noble women. For twenty-seven years she has been the president of the Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society—an executive whose zeal for the cause is unbounded, whose wonderful energy elicits surprise and comment that her physical constitution can bear such a strain. A pious Mother in Israel in the fullest sense of the word, her time is given up to the care of her aged father, to the management of some private affairs, and to works of humanity and love, the last engrossing even her leisure hours at home. All three aspects of her life present facts of interest.

JONAS FRIEDENWALD, PHILANTHROPIST

The biography of this lady, to be written properly, must include that of her father, Mr. Jonas Friedenwald. It was in Alten-busick, Hesse-Darmstadt, that he first saw the light, eighty-seven years ago, and here the family peaceably earned a living by farming until 1829. America's discipline of Great Britain in the war of 1812 was a long time in spreading the tidings of the wonderful land beyond the seas but when it reached this young man he was not content until, in the winter of 1830, a four months' passage had landed him in Baltimore. Old Chaiim Friedenwald, his father, came too; he officiated for several years in the old Stadt Schule, and died, aged eighty-six, in 1848. The rest of the family included Mrs. Jonas Friedenwald and her son, Bernard Stern, Miss Betsy (aged six), Joseph and Isaac Friedenwald. Being strictly orthodox Jews, and poor ones at that, they experienced great hardships during their long voyage, and yet greater ones when they first landed, for they had not even beds to sleep on. The mother of the family especially bewailed her sad fate in coming among strangers; and old Jonas Friedenwald's eyes to this very day light up with pleasure when he tells you how his own perseverance and his trust in God won him his success. He was ingenious; when his wife had not a washtub, he got a barrel from the captain of his vessel and, sawing it in half, made her two. Then, without any previous knowledge of the trade except a general mechanical turn, he started out as an umbrella-mender and maker, and by going around from door to door was soon able to earn a living for his family. Just before this time he had refused some proffered assistance.

AMASSED A FORTUNE FROM SMALL BEGINNINGS

Umbrella-making was soon given up for the general junk business, and in this the whole family assisted. A specialty was drumming the town for old nails, which all took a hand in straightening out and selling at a reasonable profit. The grocery business was added later. By industry and ingenuity, combined with thrift, Jonas Friedenwald amassed enough money to be able to retire from business in 1854 with a fortune sufficient to maintain him up to the present time and to lay the foundations for the present prosperity of his children and grandchildren. His education had been limited, but that was no reason why it should remain so. By closely following the newspapers and by interesting himself in the Masons, he became quite well informed on all subjects, and in the early years of his business career became the general adviser among his Jewish brethren, especially in mercantile matters and real estate.

WOODWARD, BALDWIN & COMPANY

DOMESTIC DRY GOODS COMMISSION

BALTIMORE, MD.

The history of this old firm extends back to 1844, when the firm was originally established under the name of Wm. Woodward & Company, by William Woodward, Andrew D. Jones and William H. Baldwin, Jr.

Messrs. Woodward and Baldwin were reared in Anne Arundel County, Md., and Mr. Jones was born in Baltimore City.

In 1856 the firm name was changed to Woodward, Baldwin & Company, when Mr. Christopher Columbus Baldwin became a member of it. In 1873 it became Woodward, Baldwin & Norris, Edward T. Norris, S. Baldwin and Andrew D. Jones becoming members. The firm to-day trades under the name of Woodward, Baldwin & Company, which firm is composed of Summerfield Baldwin, Elijah P. Smith, William H. Baldwin, Summerfield Baldwin, Jr., Isaac P. Rodman, J. Worthington Dorsey, William A. Baldwin, Wm. T. Westcote, Henry B. Shute, Jr. The first location of the business was Hanover and German Streets, and the present location is 117 West Baltimore Street. This firm is one of the largest domestic dry goods commission houses in the country. The success of the business has been built up under a policy of integrity, application and industry, as evidenced by the position it occupies and its reputation in the business community in general. There is a branch in New York City, established since 1862.

TREIDE & SONS

JOBBERS AND IMPORTERS OF HOSIERY, GLOVES AND UNDERWEAR

BALTIMORE, MD.

This well-known house was established in 1869 by Henry and George C. Treide, and was originally located on Baltimore Street, opposite Hanover. At present the firm occupies the magnificent warehouse at the southeast corner of Hopkins Place and German Street. Treide & Sons are jobbers and importers of Hosiery, Gloves and Underwear, and their business extends over a large section of the country. The success of this house has been won by fair dealing and dependable goods.

G. S. HOWSER & CO.

WHOLESALE DEALER IN FELT AND STRAW HATS AND CAPS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The enviable reputation of this house extends back to 1869. Mr. G. S. Howser, founder of this business, was previously a member of the firm of F. F. Horner & Co., from which firm he withdrew and began business on his own account, on the upper floor of 324 West Baltimore Street. In 1872 he was forced to move to larger quarters, at 337 West Baltimore Street. In 1881, to get still larger quarters, the firm moved to 19 South Howard Street, and in 1896 again moved to 395 West Baltimore Street, a magnificent five-story and basement warehouse with rear entrance on German Street. The firm at present consists of Frederick W. Troxell, George B. Gover C. and G. Sellman Howser. Mr. G. S. Howser, the founder of the business, died April 6, 1903.

JOHNSON, BOYD & COMPANY

The old house of Johnson, Boyd & Company was established 1883 by George J. Johnson, Wm. Boyd, Wm. McKim Hogg, all men of ripe experience and fully equipped by prior training to build up the successful business which they now control. The original location of the firm was 3 South Hanover Street, which establishment was destroyed in the great fire of 1904. The firm now occupies a magnificently equipped establishment at 19 South Hanover Street. Johnson, Boyd & Co. are jobbers and direct importers of hosiery, gloves and underwear, and their aim is to furnish first-class, reliable, standard merchandise at reasonable prices. The territory covered by this firm is very extensive and covered regularly by an efficient corps of traveling salesmen.

HENRY & STROMENGER

115 HANOVER ST.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The firm of Henry & Stromenger was established November 1, 1905, succeeding Douglas, Henry & Co. The firm is composed of Robert G. Henry and C. H. Stromenger, and occupies ample quarters at 115 Hanover Street. Henry & Stromenger are specialists in Hosiery, Sweater Coats and Bathing Suits, and do extensive business through the South and Middle West, which territory is covered by five traveling salesmen.

BLUMENTHAL & LANGFELD

MANUFACTURERS OF LADIES' SUITS AND SKIRTS

NORTHWEST CORNER LIBERTY AND GERMAN STREETS, BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm is an outgrowth of the well-known house of D. Langfeld & Co., which was established in 1884 at 26 Hanover Street, which was succeeded by L. Keene & Co., which continued in business until the fire of 1904. Mr. Edward Blumenthal and Felix Langfeld, who had been identified with the firm of L. Keene & Co., succeeded them under the name of Blumenthal & Langfeld. The original location of this firm was on Lombard Street, near the bridge, and they now occupy the large factory and display rooms at the northwest corner of Liberty and German Streets. The trade of this house extends throughout the country, which territory is covered by six salesmen.

Soon he became active in the charities, and it can be said with truth that his hand was in the foundation of most of Baltimore's Hebrew eleemosynary institutions; his best efforts being in starting the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. He also resuscitated the Free Burial Society. He was treasurer for many years of the Hebrew Benevolent Society and a director and still an honorary official of the Hebrew Hospital. Few American Jews have made more generous and more general use of their money during life, each of the charities having received a handsome donation from him. In 1871, when certain reforms were introduced into the old Stadt Schule, Mr. Friedenwald led a number of other more orthodox seceders and formed the Chizuk Emunah Congregation. This has since built, mainly through the assistance of himself and his family, the large orthodox Lloyd Street Synagogue, under the charge of Rev. Dr. H. W. Schneeberger. Of this he is president, and to it he devotes all his time and care, seldom missing one of the three daily services except from sickness; for, old and apparently hale as he is, Mr. Friedenwald has been sickly all his lifetime. He bids fair to become a centenarian, and that is the especial prayer of the many needy persons who apply to him for money and advice, not less than of his many friends. He is also honored in other spheres, being probably the oldest Mason in Baltimore and an honorable member of Warren Lodge. Joseph, his eldest son, is ex-president of the Hebrew Hospital, and has been president for several years of Bay View Asylum (City Almshouse). Isaac owns one of the largest printing establishments in the country; Moses, the next son, born in Baltimore, philanthropic like his father, and like him a successful business man, died this summer; Aaron, the youngest, is a professor of Diseases of the Eye and Ear, and has otherwise achieved sufficient distinction to entitle him to a place among the JEWISH WORTHIES (see issue of October 4, 1889); Betsy, the only daughter, is the subject of this sketch. He has thirty-four grandchildren and twenty-five great-grandchildren, and the many connections of his descendants include some of Baltimore's leading business men and best Jewish families. (Mr. Friedenwald died in August, 1893.)

MRS. WIESENFELD'S EARLY MARRIAGE

The date of Mrs. Wiesenfeld's birth is Tishri 12, 5585, wherefore she is sixty-four years of age. Unfortunately, the means of the family did not allow her to receive much of an education, although, as we have seen, she was but a little girl when she first came to Baltimore. As she grew to the age of twelve the burden of household duties was placed upon her, and she became a second mother to her younger brothers; for the struggle for existence for a large family was hard at first. Then, too, some of her time had to be employed in the nail-straightening industry and in her father's business. This training continues to be of material value to her to this very day, when she personally manages her real estate and other interests with as much skill and care for detail as characterizes the most successful business man.

Her father had always looked after poor boys, and it so happened that one of these prospered so well under his tuition, and showed himself so good a business man, that he was gladly welcomed in the Friedenwald family circle. And in 1843 Moses Wiesenfeld married Betsy Friedenwald, aged seventeen years and six months. After that time he won the personal esteem of that prince of Baltimore merchants and philanthropists, Johns Hopkins, who was always ready to help the young man with his advice and financial support. Much of his success he ascribed to Mr. Hopkins's aid and encouragement, and they remained staunch friends until death parted them. He founded the wholesale clothing firm of Wiesenfeld & Co., which until 1886, when it was dissolved, was a leading establishment of its kind in the South, and during its later years did one and a half million dollars' worth of business in a year—an unprecedented amount at that time for Baltimore. Later he was also connected with many business enterprises and corporations, where his managerial skill was of value in leading the way to permanent success. Following the good example of his mentor, he played a prominent rôle in charity, serving as president and later director of the Hebrew Benevolent Society. In 1868 he died, cut off somewhat suddenly in the middle of his splendid career, mourned by a host of friends, his worth testified by many resolutions of organizations and by letters to his sorrowing widow from prominent men far and wide. He made liberal bequests to all the charities.

THE EATON & BURNETT BUSINESS COLLEGE

9 AND 11 W. BALTIMORE STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Eaton & Burnett College was established in 1878 by A. H. Eaton, who previous to that date was half-owner of the Bryant & Stratton Business College of this city, and Mr. E. Burnett, secretary of the last-named school. In 1896, shortly after the death of Mr. Burnett, Mr. Eaton thought it for the best interest of the college to associate with him certain members of the faculty—men of integrity and experience, who were worthy of this token of confidence. Those taken into co-partnership were H. N. Staley, J. W. Dixon, J. C. Thompson, W. S. Chamberlain and C. J. Eaton. Each of these members gives special attention to the pupil's studies and his preparation for a successful entry into business life.

For more than twenty-seven years the school was located on the northeast corner of Baltimore and Charles Streets. After the great fire the firm, finding it impossible to secure quarters in the new building erected on the site of the old one, leased the rooms over 9 and 11 West Baltimore Street, next door to the corner of Charles Street, just across the street from their former location. These rooms have ceilings sixteen feet high and are heated by steam furnished from the outside, thus securing the best of ventilation and an even temperature at all times.

The course of instruction includes bookkeeping in all its modern forms, penmanship, arithmetic, shorthand, typewriting and lectures on business customs, commercial law and the demonstration of the various up-to-date office appliances.

ECLIPSE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Manufacturers of Ladies' and Children's Muslin and Flannel Underwear

CORNER FAYETTE AND FRONT STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Eclipse Manufacturing Co. was incorporated March 1, 1907, with J. Watkin Ritter, president, and Alfred Schleunes, secretary and treasurer. The original location of this business was 9-11 North Gay Street, but in March, 1908, owing to the demand for more room, the company moved to its present home at the northeast corner of Fayette and Front Streets, where it occupies four floors 66 by 60 feet each. The company employ 150 operatives, utilizing 125 machines. The territory covered comprises Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and is covered by five salesmen. The Eclipse Manufacturing Co. maintain a New York office and Display Room at 473 Broadway. The policy of this business has been to produce the highest grade of manufacturing at a minimum cost—the success of which policy is attested by the constant increase in the volume of the company's business.

ACTIVITY IN THE LADIES' SEWING SOCIETY

Mrs. Wiesenfeld had always been encouraged by her father and husband in following out her own desires to alleviate distress. At the first election of officers of the Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society in 1862 we not only see her elected a manager, but her daughter, Miss Carrie, now Mrs. Michael Rosenfeld, on the board. Evidently long before that time she was a prominent figure among the charitably inclined of this city. At the next election she accepted the presidency, and has since maintained it. She is known as the chief financier of the concern, and no male assistance is needed in that department. An idea can be gained of the character of her efforts in this direction from the statement that the society has a sinking fund of nearly $16,000, expends annually nearly $4,000, has 550 members, distributes garments and shoes to men, women and children, and all the necessities of householding to families. To have managed the host of ladies who assemble every Monday afternoon for the purpose of sewing for the poor, and to have prevented private differences and class feeling from interfering with attendance and work, or worse, from causing disruption in the society, is another tribute to her skill. She is general investigator of charitable cases, and though to those who do not understand the whys and wherefores appearing somewhat harsh, she knows many valuable things of practical charity, and how to give to the best advantage of benevolent and beneficiary. The Sewing Society, largely through her individual exertion, alleviated much distress among suffering Jews and Gentiles by the flood in Baltimore in 1868. In 1871 came the great Chicago fire, and again Mrs. Wiesenfeld's warm heart stimulated her collaborators to have the first bundle of clothing reach the sufferers and to send an aggregate of nearly $9,000 in clothing and money to the destitute of that city. The Baltimore Hebrew Orphan Asylum was burned to the ground in 1874, and she again led the society in looking after the children's wants. In 1878 the smallpox epidemic called forth the efforts of the society and its president. She gave the use of a house on Durham Street as a pest-house, visited its patients frequently, or had information brought to her daily by the attendants at a great risk to her family. They had eight patients, and all recovered.

AID FOR THE RUSSIANS

When the Russian refugees came in large numbers in 1882 her house was stocked with the clothing she had solicited for them. They came for information or help at all hours of the day and night, making of it an actual refugees' retreat; she attended in person daily to the families quartered in five houses at the expense of the Russian Aid Committee, even purchasing the food for each and every one; and in general, through and with the aid of the society, did much to alleviate their misery and put them on a road to earning a living. Since that time her house has been a sort of information bureau for the charities in the eastern district of the city in the absence of a regularly managed office for the entire city. The society and Mrs. Wiesenfeld also rendered efficient aid to the Russian colonists at Middlesex, Va., whose colony proved a disastrous failure.

Among other charitable enterprises with which Mrs. Wiesenfeld has been connected as president is the Ladies' Hospital Association, which furnished substantial aid to the Hebrew Hospital for nearly fourteen years. She was also an energetic and successful worker in a fair held for the benefit of the institution, and of a variety of entertainments held for the same cause. She has also taken an active interest in non-Jewish movements, such as a fair for the German Orphan Asylum, for the Home of the Inebriates, etc. Everyone who knows the character and extent of Mrs. Wiesenfeld's activity wonders that, even with a vigorous constitution, she does not break down under the load. Perhaps her love for the work stimulates her sufficiently to renew her strength. Yet her health is none too good, and some of her equally noble sisters in the work are insisting on relieving her of duties that can easily be borne by others.

CHARITY AND RELIGION COMBINED

Mr. Jonas Friedenwald has also been in the habit of providing the poor with mazzoth for Passover, and distributing upward of 3,000 pounds of flour per year. Mrs. Wiesenfeld's

Manufacturers of

Children's Hats, Baby Caps, Ruching, Ladies' Neckwear and Aprons, Importers and Jobbers of Veilings, Infants' Handknit
Sacques and Booties, Silk and Woolen Knit Shawls, Ladies' Head Scarfs, Etc.

15 NORTH LIBERTY STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

The business was founded in the year 1875, by Mr. Philip F. Gehrmann and his father Mr. Chas. Gehrmann, of A., trading as Ph. F. Gehrmann & Co. and engaged in the manufacture of Children's Hats, Baby Caps, Ruching, Ladies' Neckwear and Aprons and Importers and Jobbers of Veilings, Infants' Handknit Sacques and Booties, Silk and Woolen Knit Shawls, Ladies' Head Scarfs. It was started in a small way at 206 North Gay Street, but through the enterprise and untiring zeal of its founders, it soon outgrew its small quarters, and in the year 1879 it was moved to the large warehouse Nos. 33 and 35 Hanover Street. In the year 1880, Mr. August C. Gehrmann, a younger brother, was admitted to the firm. Mr. Philip F. Gehrmann dying in the year 1885, the business was successfully continued by the surviving members, Messrs. Chas. Gehrmann and August C. Gehrmann, up to February, 1904, when the entire plant was destroyed by the great Baltimore fire of that year. Mr. Chas. Gehrmann retired at this time, and in April, 1904, Mr. August C. Gehrmann continued on his own account at the original location, 206 North Gay Street, with an entirely new plant, under the old firm name.

January 1, 1907, the business was moved to the present spacious quarters. Mr. August C. Gehrmann dying in June, 1908, the same was purchased from the administrators and incorporated by the following well-known business men, several of whom were old employees of the Ph. F. Gehrmann Co.; viz.: Oscar S. Taylor, Charles F. Crist, J. William Crist, John C. Ohrenschall, George L. McDaniel. The officers of the company are, Oscar S. Taylor, President and Treasurer; Charles F. Crist, Vice-President, and Geo. L. McDaniel, Secretary, who are conducting the business most successfully at the present time. The firm has five traveling salesmen, employing altogether about eighty persons in its sale, office and manufacturing departments. The territory covered by this house includes the States of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, West Virginia, Ohio.

familiarity with the persons who might apply has made her the manager of this work. Now a fund has been created which the lady will manage during her life, and her daughter, Mrs. G. Rosenfeld, after her.

For many years Mrs. Wiesenfeld has devoted her leisure hours at home to making all the shrouds (tachrichim) after the orthodox manner for the dead of the Hebrew Burial Society, the Ladies' Sewing Society furnishing the material. She has been relieved in part of this duty, but still does much work of the same kind, and last year earned for the society from private persons of means who purchased these burial garments nearly $100.

HER DEVOTION TO HER FATHER

But though the lady loves her charity work and shirks no duty, and though she is a clever woman attending regularly to her business affairs, yet above all these is her devotion for her aged father—a care that is really touching to those who know of it. He is a thoroughly observant orthodox Jew, she as pious a Jewess; he an old man of whims, she an indulgent child slighting not one of them; he sick at times, sleepless at others; she by his side when she thinks a few words from her will bring him pleasure. "Mrs. Wiesenfeld," say her friends, "lives for her father." The lady has five sons and four daughters. Of the latter, Mrs. Goody Rosenfeld, corresponding secretary of the Ladies' Sewing Society, takes much of the same kind of interest in the charities as her mother. The third generation includes eighteen grandchildren. (Mrs. Betsy Friedenwald died February 12, 1894.)

MARYLAND STEEL COMPANY

SPARROW'S POINT, MD.

FLOATING DRY DOCK DEWEY

The town of Sparrow's Point takes its name from the tract of land upon which it stands, which is a part of the original grant to Thomas Sparrow in November, 1652, nearly 80 years before Baltimore was laid out. Here a son of the grantee, Solomon Sparrow, built a house which was known far and wide as "Sparrow's Nest." It has long since disappeared, but its site is marked by an old brick building now used as a kindergarten.

In 1886 the Pennsylvania Steel Company at Steelton, Pa., conceived the idea of having a plant on tidewater, in order to save the inland freights on raw materials as well as on the finished product. Sparrow's Point was acquired and in 1887 the work of building what has proved to be one of the best-known steel plants in the world was begun. It was known as the Maryland Extension of the Pennsylvania Steel Company until in June, 1891, when it took out a charter in its own name as "Maryland Steel Company."

From this plant has been turned out steel rails which have been shipped all over the world. In its marine department were built some of the fastest torpedo boat destroyers in our navy, the Worden, Whipple and Truxton, besides merchant steamers, passenger boats, tugs, barges and dredges.

In the dry dock department have been built two of the largest steel floating dry-docks in the world—the New Orleans dock and the famous Dewey.

The town of Sparrow's Point is a model of cleanliness. Its streets, which are well laid out, are lined with shade trees and neat cottages. Underground sewerage and deep artesian wells protect the health of the community.

Its schools, which grade from kindergarten to a high school, also include manual training and domestic science.

FRED. WALPERT & COMPANY
CURLED HAIR BRISTLES, BEDDING, ETC.
BALTIMORE, MD.

This business was established fifty-seven years ago by Mr. Fred. Walpert; on his death, in 1898, the firm was continued by Mr. Marshall W. Harden and Mr. Wm. Mantz; later, after Mr. Mantz's death, the firm was continued by Mr. Marshall W. Harden and his two sons, Fred. W. Harden and Samuel W. Harden.

The offices, showrooms and mattress factory are located at 106 and 108 North Gay Street, a double building of three and four stories, covering a combined space of 45 by 280 feet. Here is carried a heavy stock of Curled Hair Bristles, Bedding, etc., also supplies for manufacturers of mattresses. The motive power is a gas engine, and from 50 to 75 hands are employed.

The hair factory is situated on Jenkins Lane, where the making of curled hair is a specialty; buildings all equipped with the most improved and modern machinery. Steam is the motive power, and 150 to 200 employees are needed to handle the production. On the same lane is a husk factory operated by the firm. There are eight buildings devoted to this branch. The motive power here is steam, and 100 hands are employed. The trade of the house is immense, as they operate the largest curled hair factory in the city, if not in the State, and their goods go all over the United States.

J. S. WILSON, JR., & COMPANY

BANKERS

The firm of J. S. Wilson, Jr., & Co. was formed February 1, 1907; the original members of the firm were J. Sawyer Wilson, Jr., and Arthur L. Jones.

Both the members had been in the banking business for a number of years.

On February 1, 1909, Horatio L. Whitridge, who also had been in the banking business for a number of years, was admitted to the firm.

From the beginning the offices of J. S. Wilson, Jr., & Co. have been in the Calvert Bank Building. On August 1, 1909, the firm moved to large and handsome offices on the ground floor of the same building.

MENDES COHEN

Son of David I. and Harriett Cohen, was born May 4, 1831, in Baltimore City. He received his education in private schools as a civil engineer. Mr. Cohen held subordinate positions with the Baltimore & Ohio R.R. (1851-1855), assistant superintendent Hudson River R.R. (1855-1861), vice-president and later president of the Ohio & Mississippi R.R. (1861-1863), superintendent Reading & Columbia R.R. (1864-1866), president's assistant and comptroller Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. (1868-1871), president Pittsburg & Connellsville R.R. (1873-1875), director in board of same company (1873-1903), chairman Sewerage Commission, City of Baltimore (1893-1900); member of Board appointed in 1894 by President of the United States, under the River and Harbor Act of August, 1894, to examine and determine route for construction of Chesapeake and Delaware Canal; member Art Commission, City of Baltimore, since its establishment; corresponding secretary Maryland Historical Society (1884-1904) and president of same since 1904, member American Society of Civil Engineers since 1867 and president in 1892. Mr. Cohen married Miss Justina Nathan.

FABIAN FRANKLIN, PH.D., LL.D.

Son of Morris Joshua and Sarah Heilpin Franklin, was born at Eger, Hungary, January 18, 1853. Dr. Franklin attended the Columbian University, Washington, D. C., from which he received his degree of B.A. in 1869, and the Johns Hopkins University, from which he received Ph.D. in 1880. The active work of Dr. Franklin's life began in the capacity of civil engineer and surveyor, and continued along these lines until 1877. From 1879 to 1895 he was successively associate professor and professor of mathematics at Johns Hopkins University. He gave up his professorship in 1895 to assume editorial charge of the Baltimore News, a position he held until 1908. He is now associate editor of the New York Evening Post. Dr. Franklin is an associate fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston, Mass., and his mathematical papers have appeared chiefly in the American Journal of Mathematics. A full account of Dr. Franklin's life is set forth in the Jewish Encyclopædia.

ABRAHAM COHEN.

Son of Simon and Theresa (Brafman) Cohen, was born in Baltimore, September 11, 1870. His father, Simon Cohen, came to this country from Bavaria in 1845, and was a charter member of Oheb Shalom Congregation. Abraham received his preparatory education at Scheib's Zion School and the Baltimore City College, and later graduated from Johns Hopkins University, receiving the degree of A.B. in 1891 and Ph.D. in 1894. In 1895, after spending a year abroad, Mr. Cohen was made a member of the staff of the Mathematical Department, and has continued there until the present time, and is co-editor of the American Journal of Mathematics. Mr. Cohen, since 1896, has been a member of the school board of Oheb Shalom Congregation, and since 1898 chairman of the board. In 1898 he became a member of the board of directors of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. In 1906 Mr. Cohen published his "Treatise on Differential Equations" (Heath & Co., Boston). He is a Phi Beta Kappa and fellow of A. A. A. S., member of the Society of the Teachers of Mathematics of the Middle States and Maryland, and is the president of the Society of Teachers of Mathematics of Baltimore. Mr. Cohen was married to Miss Lee M. Bren, June 20, 1900. Mr. Cohen's biography has also been published in "Who's Who in America" and "American Men of Science."

THIS nationally renowned business college was founded in 1864, and was incorporated in 1895. This institution has always appealed to young men and young women who were interested in a business education, and desire to keep abreast of the times. The branches taught are:

Bookkeeping and Office Practice, Accounting, Banking Penmanship, Correspondence, Arithmetic, Rapid Calculations, Business Law, Shorthand, Typewriting and English.

DAY SCHOOL ENTIRE YEAR
NIGHT SCHOOL OCTOBER TO APRIL

THERE were never so many opportunities in the business world for young men and women with proper training as there are to-day, and the advantages which have come from a business training at this old institution may be best apprehended from the fact that in the biographies contained in this work so many prominent men mention with pleasure the fact that they graduated from Sadler's Byrant & Stratton Business College. This business school is located at 13-27 W. Fayette St., where are maintained large and commodious quarters, adapted in every way to its special work. The officers of the company are F. A. Sadler, President; R. M. Browning, Secretary. Special literature pertaining to the merits and scope of this college may be had upon personal or written application.

HON. ISIDOR RAYNER

THE BARTLETT HAYWARD CO.

Founders and Engineers

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Bartlett Hayward Company was founded in the year 1837 by the father of the late Thomas J. Hayward, beginning with the manufacture of stoves, and later on developing and bringing into general use the best, the most modern and most satisfactory method of heating and ventilating all classes of buildings.

During the period of the Civil War this firm added to their business that of conducting the Winans Locomotive Works, but owing to the extensive growth of their own line of industry they subsequently disposed of that extensive work. In 1880 they entered the field for the manufacture of gas machinery, and it is this branch of the business, that has developed to such proportions, that the corporation to-day stands as the foremost and largest manufacturer of this class of machinery in this country.

The place where this material is fabricated is in the western section of the city, covering more than three city blocks, an area of more than 300,000 square feet. Here the material is put into shape and shipped ready to be erected by their mechanics in all parts of the United States. The above cut represents the largest gas-holder ever erected either in this country or abroad, having a capacity of 15,000,000 cubic feet, and was built for the Astoria Light, Heat & Power Co., Astoria, L. I. Their work includes apparatus and complete gas plants erected at Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn, Chicago, Springfield, Boston, San Francisco, Texas, Havana, Cuba, and many other cities in the United States.

ISIDOR RAYNER.

Born in Baltimore, Md., April 11, 1850. He was educated at the University Virginia (1866-70), pursuing the academic course for three years and a law course for the last year. On leaving that institution he became a law student in the offices of Brown & Brune, Baltimore, shortly afterwards he was admitted to the bar and soon secured a large trial practice. In 1878 Rayner, as a democrat, was elected a member of the Maryland Legislature. Thereafter he devoted himself to law until 1886, when he was elected State senator. In the same year he was nominated for Congress, and was elected for three terms; he declined nomination for a fourth term.

Rayner served upon the committees of foreign affairs, coinage commission, weights and measures and commerce. He was chairman of the committee of organization and was conspicuous in the contest for the repeal of the Sherman Silver Act.

In 1899 Rayner was elected attorney-general of Maryland, and in 1901, when Admiral Schley was called before the Government Court of Inquiry, he was appointed associate counsel, becoming senior counsel upon the death of Judge Wilson. He increased his reputation by his masterly defense of that admiral. Rayner was elected United States senator on February 4, 1904, for the term beginning March 5, 1905, and re-elected on January 19, 1910, for the term commencing March 4, 1911.

DR. HARRY FRIEDENWALD.

Son of Aaron Friedenwald and Bertha Bamberger Friedenwald, was born on the 21st day of September, 1864. Dr. Friedenwald received his education in the Zion Church School of Baltimore, the Johns Hopkins University, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, University of Berlin and University of Vienna. He began the active practice of his profession in 1890, and is especially devoted to ophthalmology and otology. Dr. Friedenwald is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Johns Hopkins Club, University Club, a member of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland, American Medical Association, American Ophthalmological Society, American Otological Society, Ophthalmological Society of Germany, Fellow American Baltimore, Association of the Advancement of Science, director Jewish Theological Seminary of America, president Jewish Home for Consumptives and president of Federation of American Zionists. Dr. Friedenwald is vice-president of the Chizuk Amuno Congregation. Dr. Friedenwald has held the following positions: Professor of ophthalmology and otology, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore; ophthalmic and aural surgeon to the Baltimore Eye, Ear and Throat Charity Hospital, the Hebrew Hospital, Mercy Hospital and St. Agnes Hospital. On June 28, 1892, Dr. Friedenwald married Miss Bertha Stein and has two children, Julia Babette and Jonas.

MICHAEL S. LEVY.

Son of Lazar and Esther Levy, was born in Mur-Goslin, Province of Rosen, Germany, on March 11, 1836. His father was a man noted for his charity and good-will and his mother possessed a remarkably keen mind, and it was her influence that bore most strongly upon Mr. Levy's moral character. His education was self-achieved. At the age of eighteen he began business as a straw-hat manufacturer, from which beginning he has built up one of the largest manufacturing industries of Baltimore City. Mr. Levy is a director of the Hebrew Benevolent Society, president of the Chizuk Emunah Congregation for the past eight years, preceding which time he was vice-president of the same congregation. From 1902 to 1906 he was a director of the Guardian Trust Company and is a member of the Independent Order of Free Sons of Israel. Mr. Levy is an ardent Bible student, and considers the reading of the daily newspapers a liberal education in itself. Ambition and perseverance are two factors which Mr. Levy considers as the governing essentials of life's success. On March 26, 1856, Mr. Levy married Miss Betsy Jacobs and has had ten children, nine of whom are living.

THE AMERICAN STREET LIGHTING COMPANY

831-833-835 GREENMOUNT AVENUE
BALTIMORE, MD.

This company was established in the latter part of 1900 as the American Lighting Company by Mr. Robert S. Carswell, who was prominently identified in the oil refining business, and Mr. David M. Newbold, Sr., a man prominent in the financial world of Baltimore.

The company was originally located on Frederick and Fayette Streets, but owing to its quick and wonderful growth was compelled to occupy its present commodious quarters at 831-835 Greenmount Avenue.

The company has in operation at the present time over 40,000 of its patented street lamps under municipal contracts in Baltimore, Washington, Wilmington, Newport,

MT. VERNON PLACE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Bridgeport, Richmond, Akron and many other towns throughout this country and Canada. Its success is due to its ability to give municipalities efficient street lighting service at a minimum cost. In Baltimore, where it has had a contract for the past ten years, and in Washington for the past six years, the saving to the municipalities has averaged over half a million dollars.

The present officers of the company are:

DAVID E. EVANS & COMPANY

Engineers and Contractors

Reinforced Concrete Construction and Railway

11 EAST LEXINGTON STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

David E. Evans & Company was established in 1891 by Mr. David E. Evans. In 1906 Mr. David E. Evans took Mr. Robert W. Evans in the firm, since which time Mr. Evans has died, and the business is now conducted by Mr. Robert W. Evans under the old firm name. This firm occupies a high position as Engineers and Contractors in Reinforced Concrete Construction and Railway Construction, having done 75 per cent. of this work for the street railways of Baltimore City, and several very large railroad contracts; also a great number of reinforced concrete sawmills and factories throughout the South. This company erected the first reinforced concrete steam-heated lumber dry kilns, the perfect success of which has added considerably to their reputation and business. The aim of this company has been to demonstrate practically the thorough utility of reinforced concrete construction, and the success of its efforts are clearly shown by the extensive contracts which have come to it, and the general satisfaction which all its work has given throughout wide territory.

DR. JULIUS FRIEDENWALD

MARTIN GILLET & COMPANY

"HE-NO TEA"

BALTIMORE, MD.

This exclusive tea importing house is the oldest in the United States. The reputation of Martin Gillet & Co. as large importers of teas extends as far back as 1811, and the firm has always occupied a most prominent place among the great tea houses of the country, and, in fact, is the largest house in the United States engaged exclusively in the business of importing and packing teas. They are the originators of packing teas in cylindrical packages tied at the end, and their special brand of "He-No" is to be seen everywhere. This brand is claimed to be the purest and best flavored tea placed on the market, a claim which the enormous demand would appear to justify. In addition, a large general tea business is transacted. The former location of the concern, at Exchange Place and Holliday Street, was destroyed in the great fire of February, 1904, and temporary quarters were taken at 1120 Cathedral Street, until the erection of the large new building on the corner of Lombard and Cheapside Streets, styled the "He-No Tea Building," and is a brick structure of six stories. Martin Gillet founded this company, and in 1832 took into the business his son-in-law, Owen A. Gill. The latter's sons, Owen A., Jr., M. Gillet, C. Lorraine, Ernest and Jerome, were made members as they became of age. In 1904 Alfred W. Jacobsen, a great-grandson of Martin Gillet, was made a member. The old name has been kept intact, though it is now a corporation, with the great-grandsons of the founders as officers, Alfred W. Jacobsen, president; M. Gillet Gill, vice-president and treasurer, and Ernest A. Gill, secretary.

DANIEL BENDANN

Sketch of Daniel Bendann, the founder of the photographic firm of Bendann Bros., the first important Jewish firm in that profession, and one of the leading ones in the United States.

At age of sixteen, in 1851, entered the Whitehurst studio in Richmond; in 1854 came to the Baltimore studio of same firm; in 1856 returned to Richmond and went into business for himself. He moved to Baltimore in 1858 and, finding his business growing, took in his younger brother, David, and in 1861 and 1862 was already the leading studio south of Philadelphia, and became one of the largest in the country. They employed some of the best artists in oil and pastel portraiture in the country, introducing such men as Dabour, Louverix, Thos. Hovenden, Chas. Y. Turner and others who afterwards became famous. Daniel Bendann introduced many improvements in photography, the best-known one being the printing in of artificial backgrounds (which he patented), known as "Bendann's Backgrounds." The brothers separated about twenty years ago, the younger one going into the business of selling art works and frames. Daniel Bendann retired from active business about nine years ago.

HENRY BURGUNDER (DECEASED, 1910)

Son of Benjamin and Caroline Burgunder, was born in Baltimore City on February 12, 1854, receiving his education in private schools. Mr. Burgunder was a wholesale clothing manufacturer until recently, when he retired from active business, originally being a member of the firm of Ambach, Burgunder & Co. and latterly of the firm of Burgunder Bros. & Co. Mr. Burgunder, from 1903 to 1906, was vice-president and trustee of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. On March 23, 1881, he married Miss Rose Bernei and has had four children, Florence B. Oppenheim, wife of Isaac A. Oppenheim, of the firm of Oppenheim, Oberndorf & Co., of Baltimore; Carrie B. Westheimer, wife of Henry F. Westheimer, vice-president of the Cahn Belt Co., of Baltimore; B. Bernie and Herbert, all living.

JACOB RAB

Son of Emanuel and Rosa Rab, was born in Baltimore City on September 15, 1852. His early education was received in private schools, later attending Morgan's Institute and Eaton & Burnett's Business College and graduating in 1893 from the Baltimore Law School. Judge Rab has taken an active interest in local politics, being an ardent Democrat and at present one of the magistrates of Baltimore City. For the last ten years he has been vice-president of the Hebrew Friendly Inn and Home for the Aged, and is a director of the Hebrew Children's Sheltering and Protective Society and director and counsellor of the Hebrew Free Loan Association and director and a trustee of the United Hebrew Charities. Judge Rab attributes his success in life "To attending strictly to business and devoting his spare time in the interest of the various charities."

JOSEPH FRIEDENWALD

Son of Jonas and Merle Friedenwald was born at Altendufik, Germany, on July 24, 1827. When about twenty-four years of age Mr. Friedenwald became connected with the firm of Wiesenfeld & Co., wholesale clothiers, and for the last twenty-five years has been president of the Crown Cork & Seal Co. Mr. Friedenwald filled the position of president of the Board of Trustees of Bay View Asylum for twenty-five years and was the first president of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. He attends the Chizuk Emunah Temple and is a member of the Masonic fraternity and Order of Red Men. On February 14, 1852, Mr. Friedenwald married Miss Rosina Rosewald and has had fourteen children, twelve of whom are living.

H. F RADECKE & SONS

MANUFACTURERS OF WOODEN SHIPPING CASES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION

117, 119, 121 WEST CROSS STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established in 1884 by Herman F. Radecke and Henry D. Louis. In 1907 Mr. Herman L. Radecke bought out Henry D. Louis' interest and formed the company of H. F. Radecke & Sons. Herman F. Radecke was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1841 and came to this country in 1853, and in 1884 started the magnificent business in which he is still directly interested with his sons, Charles J. and Herman J. Radecke. The original location of this business was Garrett Street, back of the Baltimore Bargain House. The present location is 117, 119 and 121 West Cross Street, where is conducted a plant with facilities for turning out $100,000 worth of finished product per year. The policy of this house is to maintain a high standard of workmanship and to give satisfaction to its extensive patronage—which has been growing every day since the firm began business.

HENRY SONNEBORN

GEORGE E. FREY

Caterer at Weddings, Banquets and Luncheons

1018 LINDEN AVENUE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Formerly at 318 W. Preston Street

Mr. George E. Frey first engaged in the catering business during the summer season of 1904 at Queenstown, Md.—at Bolling's Hotel. A year later he assumed charge of the Love Point Hotel at Love Point, Md. From 1906 to the present Mr. Frey has been the caterer of the Baltimore Yacht Club and Green Spring Valley Hunt Club. During the years 1908-1909 the culinary department of the café in the Marlborough Apartments, Eutaw Place, was presided over by Mr. Frey, and for several years the Governor's Grill Room—owned by ex-Governor Frank Brown—at Charles and Read Streets was in Mr. Frey's charge.

Mr. Frey needs no introduction to the social and commercial aristocracy of Baltimore—in fact, throughout the eastern part of the United States—for at the two weeks' meet of the National Beagle Club of America, composed of the flower of representative men from all parts of the United States, which met for a beagle hunt in the Green Spring Valley during 1906 and 1907, Mr. Frey came in contact with this body by reason of catering to their epicurean needs during their stay at the Avalon Inn. Especially noteworthy is the fact that Mr. Wm. D. Rockefeller, a nephew of the oil magnate, was one of the visiting members of the Beagle Club.

Among the well-known men to whom Mr. Frey has rendered service as a caterer may be mentioned:

HENRY SONNEBORN

Henry Sonneborn was born eighty-four years ago in Breidenbach, a little hamlet in the German province of Hessen Nassau. State records show that his ancestors had lived in this world-spot since the year 1650.

Henry was one of the older children of a very large family and from the age of fifteen he contributed to its support. At that age he and his brother were engaged in the fur business, purchasing skins of all varieties from farmers and hunters and selling them in turn in the neighboring towns. He also dealt in cattle.

At the age of twenty-three, in the year 1849, young Henry, accompanied by his brother Jonas, left his home and started out for the new world. That his financial condition was by no means enviable is shown by the fact that on landing in Philadelphia he and his brother together had only sufficient money for one single railroad fare to Baltimore, which was their destination. Henry sent his brother ahead and waited in Philadelphia until his brother had borrowed the required amount from relatives in Baltimore to enable him to get to that city.

Arrived in that city, he was recommended to a wholesale firm, from which he purchased a small stock of novelties on credit. He started out for the German settlement, namely, York and Adams counties, where the Pennsylvania German spoken by his prospective customers put him in a more intelligible relation than would have been the case in an English-spoken community. After two weeks' trip he returned to Baltimore, paid for his forty-two dollar stock and purchased a new supply.

His first year was a very successful one. During this time he realized a profit of $1,200, which capital, after sending a part of it to his parents, he invested in a personal business enterprise in the character of a small men's furnishing business in Fairmount, W. Va.

Success seemed to crown all his efforts, for in two years' time he had started branch establishments in Clarksburg, W. Va., Janesville, Wis., and Cleveland, Ohio. Taking his younger brothers in the business, he placed each of them in charge of one of his branch stores.

Meanwhile he had sent for his sweetheart, Berthe Harsh, who in his native land had been anxiously awaiting her betrothed's success across the sea. Their marriage was blessed with many children, two of whom, Mrs. Hennie Hutzler and Mrs. Seymour Mandelbaum, survive.

In 1853 Mr. Sonneborn moved with his family to Baltimore and made his store in that city the headquarters for his chain of establishments. It was there that he begun the manufacture of clothing, which enabled him to sell his own product instead of purchasing from others. This marked the beginning of the present firm of Henry Sonneborn & Co.

Henry Sonneborn's good fortune was not due to mere coincidence of happy accidents. Many other men began under similar circumstances, but very few indeed possessed that peculiar combination of qualities which made his success certain. His chief characteristics were honesty, intelligence, courage and pertinacity. The following is an illustration of his methods in business: In 1854 there was in his several stores a large quantity of unsaleable merchandise, and although having a wife and two children, Sonneborn determined to leave them and travel through the Middle West with the intention of selling all his surplus stock. After a six month's trip through Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Minneapolis he returned to his family with all his surplus stock sold at a satisfactory profit.

In 1855 he sold his branch stores to his brothers and started in his Baltimore establishment to manufacture for the wholesale trade exclusively. His customers were a few country merchants, but since that time his business has so increased from year to year that to-day he counts his customers in every State in the Union, and his factory ranks as the largest clothing plant in the world, having a daily output of three thousand suits. In later years he married a second time, again taking a wife from his birthplace, Miss Auguste Sonneborn, and a son, Henry Sonneborn, Jr., was born to bring joy to his old age.

Notwithstanding his eighty-four years, Mr. Sonneborn is tall and erect in stature and vigorous in all his faculties and may be seen daily at his office, where he still takes a never-decreasing interest in the activities of the business of which he was the founder and to which he is still the father.

DR. THOS. WM. SPRANKLIN

Veterinary Surgeon
Maryland Veterinary Hospital

1311-1321 HARFORD AVE., BALTIMORE, MD.

Dr. Spranklin began the practice of his profession in Baltimore in 1884, in which year he graduated from the American Veterinary College of New York. The original location of the hospital was 810 North Caroline St.; later he moved to 6 North High St., but the demand for more room forced him to move to his present commodious quarters occupying 1311-1321 Harford ave., where is conducted one of the finest veterinary hospitals in the country, being equipped with every appliance and facility for the scientific cure of animals. Dr. Spranklin was the first veterinarian to operate his own hospital, in 1888 building the Maryland Veterinary Hospital of Baltimore, which, as we have said before, is one of the largest and most complete institutions of its kind in the United States, with special departments for the care of equines, felines and canines. Dr. Spranklin maintains a stock farm and sanitarium of over 500 acres in Anne Arundel County, Maryland, immediately on the Chesapeake Bay and near the Severn River. The patronage which Dr. Spranklin enjoys comes from the most prominent class of users and lovers of fine animals. The establishment is equipped with an up-to-date bacteriological department, where all contagious and infectious diseases are diagnosed by microscopic examination.

SURGICAL WARD IN MARYLAND VETERINARY HOSPITAL—1311-21 HARFORD AVE.

ISAAC STROUSE

BURT MACHINE COMPANY BALTIMORE, MD.

FOUNDED 1897

The Burt Labeling Machine

has an international reputation, being used from Maine to California, and in England, Norway, France, Germany, Switzerland, South Africa, Argentine Republic, Australia, New Zealand and New South Wales.

It has been built for labeling all kinds of cylindrical packages, wood, tin, paper or glass, of the hermetically sealed, friction-lid and screw-top style; also slip-cover cans without beads.

A majority of the prominent fruit, vegetable and condensed-milk canners use the Burt machine, as do many packers of meat, soup, oysters, fish, cocoa, syrup, baking-powder, cotton oil, tobacco, lye, paint, cleaning compound, incandescent mantles, etc.

The BURT WRAPPING AND LACQUERING MACHINES are also important products of this corporation, the former machine being used where wrapper labels are employed to completely cover the package—the wrapper label is applied around the package and the ends folded in one operation. The lacquering machine is used where a coating of lacquer or varnish must be put on the can—it does this work automatically and much neater and faster than can be done by hand.

Among the prominent users of BURT MACHINES are the well-known wholesale grocery houses of Messrs. Steele-Weddes Co., Chicago, and Messrs. Seeman Bros., New York City; The Standard Varnish Works, New York, and The California Fruit Canners' Association, San Francisco.

LEOPOLD BLUMENBERG (DECEASED).

Leopold Blumenberg was born in Brandenburg, Prussia, September 28, 1827, the twenty-first of a family of twenty-two children, and was educated in the gymnasium of Frankfort-on-the-Oder. He enlisted in the army at the age of twenty-one, and for his distinguished services in the Prussian-Danish War was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. Resenting the anti-Semitism, which deprived him of the medal to which he was entitled, he emigrated to America in 1854, settling in Baltimore.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he abandoned a profitable business and devoted his energies to securing enlistments and organizing the Fifth Maryland Regiment. This work for the Union cause excited the animosity of local secessionists, who attempted to hang him and made it necessary for three nights to barricade and guard his house. Because of his military experience in Europe and his success in securing troops he was made a major of the Fifth Regiment, which soon joined McClellan's forces. Blumenberg was acting colonel of his regiment near Hampton Roads during the Peninsular campaign, and later received a colonel's commission. At the Battle of Antietam, while leading his regiment in a charge on rifle-pits, he received a severe wound in the thigh, which confined him to his bed for several months. When he had partly recovered he was appointed by President Lincoln provost-marshal of the third Maryland district; during the two years in which he held this office he made himself very unpopular by a strict enforcement of the laws. President Johnson gave him a position in the revenue department and commissioned him brigadier-general, United States Volunteers by brevet.

Major Blumenberg was very popular among the Germans and the Jews of Baltimore. He was a member of the Har Sinai Congregation and of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. He was for many years president of the Baltimore Schützen, contributing much to its prosperity, and was in numerous contests the "King," or best shot. A few months before his death he was honored with the office of president of the National Schützen-Verein of America. He never recovered completely from the wound he had received at Antietam, and he died from its effects on August 12, 1876.

Material chiefly from article by Mr. Albert M. Friedenberg in Jewish Encyclopedia.

ISAAC STROUSE

Son of Moses and Sophie (Cahn) Strouse, was born in Grombach, Baden, Germany, on November 1, 1835. His father was a man of powerful energy—but his mother's influence was strongest in molding his intellectual and moral character. Mr. Strouse's early education was limited to the public schools in the small town in which he was born, but he soon learned the value of education by combining study with work and adopted economy and ambition as principles for future guidance. In 1850 he arrived in America, and after clerking for a period he went West, opening a store in Peru, Ill. After years of incessant hard work he moved to Baltimore and founded the great clothing manufacturing business of Strouse & Brothers. Mr. Strouse is a Mason, Odd Fellow and a member of the Phoenix and Suburban Clubs. He is a member of Oheb Shalom Congregation, of which temple he has been president for thirty years, and director of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum for thirty-three years. Strict attention to the details of business and upright dealings mark the secret of Mr. Strouse's successful life.

REV. JACOB SCHUMAN

Son of Abraham and Rubi Schuman, was born in Mittau, Kurland, on February 13, 1870, was educated in public schools, and from 1896 to 1897 was cantor to the Congregation Beth Jacob and from 1897 to 1908 to the Congregation Bnai Sholaum, and was elected cantor of Eutaw Place Temple in 1908. Rev. Schuman married Miss Ella Levitas January 22, 1893, and has had four children; one died recently.

L. FRIEDMAN

LADIES' TAILOR

1602 WEST FAYETTE STREET, CORNER GILMORE STREET,
BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Lewis Friedman, who ranks among Baltimore's foremost ladies' tailor, established his present business in 1907 at 1602 West Fayette Street. As designer and maker of ladies' tailor-made suits Mr. Friedman has won a leading position in Baltimore. The modeling and the workmanship of the garments which come from his establishment have won for him a magnificent patronage, so that at this time he is making fifty suits per week and upwards. Mr. Friedman's telephone connection is C. & P. Gilmore 736 M.

JOHN C. SCHERER, JR., COMPANY

The old firm of John C. Scherer, Jr., Company was founded in 1837 by Christopher Scherer, who was later succeeded by his son, John C. Scherer, Jr. In the beginning Christopher Scherer conducted a furniture store, and afterwards his son established the factory. Mr. John C. Scherer, Jr., died in 1907, and the business is continued under the same firm name by Mr. Harry R. Ruse and Mr. C. M. Thompson. The original location of the business was 15 Harrison Street, and now occupy 7 to 15 Harrison Street as factory, with salesrooms at 9 and 11 North Gay Street. The special line of business conducted by John C. Scherer, Jr., is the manufacturing of all kinds of fixtures, cabinet-making and interior wood, with special facilities for installing bank, store and drug fixtures. The firm also carries a fine line of office furniture, manufactured by the Doten-Dunton Desk Co. This house fitted out the Dorchester National Bank, People's National Bank and the Potomac Savings Bank, which show that the firm is capable of handling work to any extent and of any character.

M. S. LEVY

SIEGEL, ROTHSCHILD & COMPANY

Manufacturers of Umbrellas, Parasols and Walking Sticks

N.E. CORNER BALTIMORE & HOWARD STS.
BALTIMORE, MD.

The firm of Siegel, Rothschild & Co. was established in 1899 by D. Siegel, Daniel A. Weinberg and B. Rothschild, prior to which time the members had been engaged in retail lines. The original location of the business was 418 and 420 W. Baltimore St., and they now occupy commodious quarters known as 222, 224 and 226 W. Baltimore St., where is maintained a manufacturing plant that, in point of equipment and facilities, has few equals, having a capacity of 5000 pieces daily. The firm is engaged exclusively in the manufacture of high-grade umbrellas, parasols and walking sticks, and the territory in which their goods is sold is national and international, the facilities of the house being virtually unlimited. The policy of the house is to make a dependable class of goods, and to sell to the Best Trade only.

With Branches in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco

SIMON M. HANLINE

Son of Maurice and Bertha (Naumburg) Hanline, was born in Baltimore on March 16, 1858, receiving his education in the public schools of Baltimore and the Baltimore City College. He followed his father's business of manufacturing paint, to which business he and his brother now succeed, trading under the name of Hanline Bros. Mr. Hanline attends the Madison Avenue Temple and is a member of the Phoenix and Suburban Clubs, of the Elks and Amicable Lodge, A. F. & A. M., St. John's Chapter. Mr. Hanline married Miss Rosetta Baernstein and has two children, Leon S. Hanline and Mrs. Fred S. Stern.

HERMAN GOLDSTROM

Son of Abraham and Rachel Goldstrom, was born in Baltimore City December 12, 1861, receiving his education in the public schools and beginning his business career as a clerk for Noah & Froehlich, and in 1887 formed the firm of H. Goldstrom & Co., later taking into partnership his brother, Lewis A. Goldstrom, and changing the firm name to Goldstrom Bros. Mr. Goldstrom attends the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation and is a member of the Royal Arcanum, I. O. H. and B. P. O. E. Mr. Goldstrom married Miss Emma Peyser January 13, 1889, and has had two children, Theodore and Marion, both living.

EMANUEL HECHT

Son of Samuel (Jr.) and Babbitt Hecht, was born in Baltimore City October 24, 1856. He began work at the age of thirteen years in a shop on Broadway, and for this reason his early educational opportunities were very restricted. Mr. Hecht is now interested in various large businesses, of both wholesale and retail character, and he attributes his success to paying close attention to the seemingly unimportant details of business, combined with hard work, concentration of mind and singleness of purpose. Mr. Hecht married Miss Mamie Sycle in 1885 and has eleven children, all living.

JACOB M. MOSES.

Son of Moses and Rosa (Levi) Moses, was born in Baltimore City on February 17, 1873. He was educated in the public schools of Baltimore, Johns Hopkins University and the University of Maryland. Began the practice of law in 1895, and was elected a member of the State Senate of Maryland in 1899 to serve four years, and is at present Judge of the Juvenile Court of Baltimore City. Judge Moses is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society and has published a work on "Law Applicable to Strikes." He married Miss Hortense E. Guggenheimer on January 7, 1903, and has one child living—Richard G. Moses. Judge Moses is a member of the Madison Avenue Temple.

JUDGE MYER J. BLOCK.

Son of Simon J. and Barbara Block, was born in Baltimore, Md., August 26, 1844. Mr. Block was educated in public and private schools of Baltimore, and began active life as errand boy at the age of thirteen years, and is at present chief judge of Orphans Court of Baltimore City. From 1870-75 was supervisor in Harbor Board of Baltimore City. From 1875-78 he was clerk to Board of Assessors, and from 1878-98 he was deputy register of wills, and since 1899 has been judge of the Orphans Court of Baltimore City. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum, the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, the Hephtasophs, the National Union, the Loyal Additional, the Monday Club, the Elks, Monumental Democratic Club, Clover Club, Society of the Army and Navy of the Confederate States in Maryland, and is associated with the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation.

FLORENCE W. MACCARTHY COMPANY

"A New Kind of a House"

29 HOPKINS PLACE
BALTIMORE

The Florence W. MacCarthy Company was established June 1, 1903, and was originally located at 111 West Baltimore Street until the great fire of 1904, when its building was entirely destroyed. Within five days, however, the company had secured, equipped and thoroughly stocked a new business home at 24 South Paca Street, being the first house in Baltimore to be in a position to do business after the fire.

Owing to the increasing demand for space the company later moved to 24 Hanover Street, where they remained until forced again to seek larger quarters in their recently occupied six-story warehouse at 29 Hopkins Place, where is utilized 36,000 square feet of floor space, most perfectly lighted and in every way one of the finest appointed business establishments in Baltimore City.

The Florence W. MacCarthy Company are importers and distributors of laces, embroideries, ladies' neckwear and fancy notions, and do an extensive business throughout the South and extending west into Colorado and California, which territory is covered by twenty-two salesmen. The company maintains foreign offices at St. Gall, Calais and Nottingham, and have branch offices in this country in Los Angeles, Denver, St. Louis, Pittsburg and Atlanta.

"A New Kind of a House"

FABIAN FRANKLIN

JOHN J. BUFFINGTON & COMPANY

Wholesale Dealers and Importers of

Grass and Field Seeds and Seed Grains

5-7 W. LOMBARD ST.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Surrounded by a large and fertile agricultural territory, Baltimore is naturally an important depot for the distribution of seeds. John J. Buffington & Company was established June 1, 1902, by John J. Buffington and Walter Wellslager, succeeding the old house of Samuel Townsend & Son, which was established in 1865.

Mr. Wellslager died in September, 1902, and in 1904 Howard O. Buffington became a member of the firm. John J. Buffington, prior to engaging in business on his own account, was connected with his predecessors for nearly ten years as salesman and assistant manager. Howard O. Buffington, prior to 1904, was in the dressing and shipping business of fancy poultry and game, trading under the firm name of Howard O. Buffington & Company.

The original location of John J. Buffington & Co. was at 104 S. Charles Street. Owing to the business having increased very largely from the beginning, and constantly increasing from year to year it became necessary to secure larger quarters and in 1908 they secured the large double warehouses, 5 and 7 W. Lombard Street, which they now occupy.

The facilities of this house are most modern and complete in every detail for recleaning and handling all kinds of seed and seed grain.

MRS. ROSIE WIESENFELD ROSENFELD

Daughter of Moses and Betsy Friedenwald Wiesenfeld, was born in Baltimore City on December 29, 1857. Her father was a wholesale merchant, a man of great prominence and at one time president of the Hebrew Benevolent Society. Mrs. Rosenfeld was educated at the Notre Dame of Baltimore and has been secretary of the Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society, director of Women's Hospital, chairman on Committee on Religion of Jewish Council of Women, founder of Jewish Newsboys' Association and founder, president and director of the Ladies' Auxiliary Association of Chizuk Emunah Congregation and director of the Chizuk Emunah Congregation. Mrs. Rosenfeld is a woman of great mental activity and humanitarianism, devoting her time largely to causes which have as their end the betterment of the condition of her fellow creatures, and her favorite recreation is found in music. On January 24, 1877, she became the wife of Col. Goody Rosenfeld, and they have one son, Moses W. Rosenfeld. Mrs. Rosenfeld by marriage and by blood is connected with three of the oldest and most prominently known Jewish families in Baltimore, the Wiesenfeld, Friedenwald and Rosenfeld families.

SAMUEL ROSENTHAL

Son of Sigmund and Bettie Rosenthal, was born in Baltimore City January 6, 1855, receiving his education in the public schools, Knapp's Institute and Sadler's Bryant & Stratton Business College. At the age of fourteen he worked for his uncle in the dry goods business as cashier. Mr. Rosenthal has been connected with the clothing manufacturing house of Strouse & Bros. for forty years, during twenty-five years of which time he has been a partner. For the past ten years he has also been a firm member of the Washington house of Parker, Bridget & Co. Mr. Rosenthal was president of the Clothiers' Board of Trade, president Credit Men's Association, State Board of Charities, and is a director of the Drovers' and Mechanics' National Bank of Baltimore. The Phoenix and Suburban Clubs were both organized by Samuel Rosenthal, of the former he was president for ten years and of the latter he is the first and only president that club has had. He attends the Oheb Shalom Temple and contributed the Samuel and Emma Rosenthal Memorial Cottages to the Epstein Hospital for Consumptives. Mr. Rosenthal has been a consistent contributor to law, credit and business magazines of national scope and has accumulated a valuable library of scientific, philosophical and poetical works, of which subjects he is an ardent reader.

"To love your work so well as to understand its every detail and thereby become master of all its problems" is the sapient and salient suggestion which Mr. Rosenthal gives as the secret of human success. Samuel Rosenthal married Emma May on May 2, 1876, and has had three children, two of whom are living.

ELIAS NATHAN RABINOWITZ

Son of Isaiah and Fanny (Schapero) Rabinowitz, was born in Russia March 21, 1882. The early influence of home surroundings made a student of young Elias. He attended the Central High School of Philadelphia from 1895 to 1899, Haverford College from 1899 to 1903 and Jewish Theological Seminary from 1904 to 1908, receiving the degrees of A.B. and rabbi. He began active work as principal of Talmud Torah in 1909, having been also connected with the Jewish Protectory in 1908 and an instructor in the Jewish Theological Seminary during the winter of 1908-1909.

REV. HENRY HOCHHEIMER

Son of Rabbi Isaac Hochheimer, was born on October 3, 1818, at Ansbach, Middle Franconia. He was educated under his grandfather, Rabbi Guggenheimer, and Rabbi Hirsch, of Munich, receiving his Ph.D. at University of Munich. Rev. Hochheimer was, from 1844 to 1849, assistant rabbi to his father in Schenhausen; from 1859 to 1892 was rabbi of Oheb Israel, Baltimore, and made rabbi emeritus in 1892. Rev. Hochheimer has contributed extensively to the Jewish press, especially in Germany. He married Miss Rosalia Hochheimer and has had four children, two of whom are living.

EPHRAIM MACHT

Real Estate and Banking

MACHT BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Ephraim Macht established this business about eighteen years ago, and his career has been marked by constant success, due to the strict efficiency and integrity of his methods. His offices originally were at 310-16 Equitable Building, and temporarily at 3 and 4 Heen Building, after which time he returned to the Equitable Building, and occupied suite 310 to 318 until the completion of his own building on Fayette Street between Charles and St. Paul Streets, and now known as the "Macht Building."

Mr. Macht is engaged in the Real Estate and Banking Business, and has facilities for handling real estate in every branch, and stands one of the foremost dealers in this line in the city. He also conducts a very extensive banking business. Mr. Macht ranks to-day as one of Baltimore's leading business factors.

UNITED SHIRT & COLLAR CO.

Lion Collars and Cuffs
The MacHurdle Full-Dress Shirt and Night Robes

111 GERMAN STREET

Among the great manufacturing industries maintaining a branch in Baltimore City may be noted the United Shirt & Collar Co., of Troy, N. Y. This company is one of the largest establishments of its kind in the world, and its products are sold everywhere where excellence is a requirement of demand. The Baltimore branch looks after the entire Southern trade and a portion of the Western business.

The United Shirt & Collar Co. was established in 1890 and represents the consolidated interests of such prominent factories as J. K. P. Pine, Biermeister & Spicer, Sanford & Robinson, S. A. House's Sons and Marshall & Briggs. The general offices and factories of this business are located in Troy, N. Y., and the company maintains branches in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Baltimore, Pittsburg, St. Louis, New Orleans, Minneapolis and Cleveland. The United Shirt & Collar Co. are makers of Lion collars and cuffs, the Anchor Brand collars and cuffs, the MacHurdle full-dress shirt, Lion nightrobes, the Simplex shirt and Lion shirt.

Since 1890 the Baltimore office and the Philadelphia office have been under the management of Col. Franklin P. Swazey. Under Colonel Swazey the business of the local territory has shown a remarkable increase, due largely to the colonel's masterful executive ability and his perfect popularity. The Baltimore branch occupy a magnificent five-story and basement warehouse at 111 West German Street, where is carried an eminent stock of all the famous products of the company.

JACOB EPSTEIN.

BUILDING HIS BALTIMORE BARGAIN HOUSE WITHOUT CAPITAL.

STARTED TWENTY-NINE YEARS AGO IN AN 18 x 30 STORE; NOW ONE HUNDRED KEEP HIS ACCOUNTS.

One of the marvels in the commercial life of Baltimore about which there are many inquiries made and but little has been published in the assembly of merchandising operations is known as the Baltimore Bargain House. This institution has been successful on a large scale because it rests on the single idea that Baltimore is the best jobbing market in the country. There is active interest in what it is, how it originated and why it grows. In the first place, it is neither a corporation nor a syndicate of merchants. The whole enterprise is the work of one man, who originated and developed it, and dominates its management. He is Jacob Epstein.

10,000 CASES SHIPPED DAILY.

When it is stated that this concern has shipped a daily average of 10,000 cases of goods, the value of the business in a single month has exceeded one million dollars and that it has over 30,000 patrons, the magnitude of the operations appears. This business began in 1881 on Barre Street, near Hanover, in a store 18 x 30 feet. Twenty-nine years is not a long period in developing a mercantile business; it looks rather short when the results reached by Mr. Epstein are examined. Supposing he had retained his original store width of eighteen feet and as his business expanded just added to its depth, the Epstein establishment, with its present store space, would stretch a distance of sixty-three to sixty-five miles, with a uniform width of eighteen feet. The size of his present establishment in its conspicuous location is well known to Baltimoreans, but the public has had no correct impression of the size of the idea in its original shape. Did Mr. Epstein start with a definite scheme? Did he have good backing? Is he a native of Baltimore, and if not, why did he select this city and what did he find won success? are the queries that natural interest in such a big establishment have aroused.

EPSTEIN FINDS JOY IN WORK.

Mr. Epstein has such a fixed habit of pushing his business and exploiting his features that his own personality has been kept in the background. He is a young man, although there is a notion that he is up in years. He is about forty-five years of age, but looks five years younger. He was seventeen years of age when he started in business. This is rather a shock to the conventional idea that a long apprenticeship should precede such a move. Directing such a business, the expectation is to find a man in which the nervous pressure is at a high tension and charges the atmosphere around him. But Mr. Epstein does not fulfil this expectation. There is no evidence in his manner that his business is a burden and that he is a candidate for the menace of Americans doing big things—nervous prostration. He impresses one with the idea that his business is a joy with him. Organization and system he credits with making it so. A battery of push-buttons on his desk keeps his lieutenants in touch with their chief, and each day there is a trial balance of the operations of the whole establishment on his desk. It tells what each department has done or failed to do, and gives a comparison with the corresponding date of the preceding year. Moderate working hours and every year a long vacation are permitted to Mr. Epstein by this system and soften the effects of the mental physical stress of running such an establishment. But short hours and recreation were not possible in the creative stages of this enterprise. Then the dawn of day and the midnight hours found this man hammering away at his self-devised plan of building up a large distributing business.

NO CAPITAL; NO PULL.

Mr. Epstein admitted that he dreamed of a large establishment, but started small for the reason that he had no capital but energy and enthusiasm. Neither did he have influential

MARCUS W. WOLF & CO.

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE STATIONERS

204 AND 206 WEST GERMAN STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

This business was established June 1, 1875, by Marcus W. Wolf at 7, 9 and 11 Sharp Street, afterwards known as Hopkins Place, which had formerly been three small two-story dwelling-houses that had a broad front with very little depth, and where he remained for three years. After which time he moved to a four-story iron-front building more than twice the depth of the old building known as 13 Hopkins Place.

Here he remained for ten years, and in 1888 moved to the present location, which is a store more than double the size of the former one.

He employs seven salesmen and covers a territory embracing Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Mr. Wolf was born and raised in Baltimore and is the sole member of the firm.

All goods guaranteed as represented.

FOSTER BROTHERS MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Manufacturers of

Spring Beds, Metallic Bedsteads, Couch

320-326 NORTH HOLLIDAY STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Foster Bros. Mfg. Co. was incorporated 1891, and the officers of the company are: F. L. Groff, president; J. E. Diemer, secretary, and P. E. Graff, treasurer and general manager. The location of this business is at 320, 322, 324 and 326 North Holliday Street, where is maintained a perfectly equipped plant, manufacturing the most reliable type of Spring Beds and Metallic Bedsteads, which are shipped to all sections of the country.

INTERNATIONAL BEDDING COMPANY

NUMBER 337 NORTH STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The International Bedding Co. was incorporated in 1904 and is under the management of Mr. H. M. Taylor, secretary and general manager, with offices and plant at 337 North Street. This company are manufacturers of Mattresses and Pillows of standard grade and excellence, and its trade reaches throughout a wide area of the United States.

friends. He had to build up from the things he alone possessed. Asked what were his present views of what brought success in business his reply was: "Adaptability for the work undertaken; judgment, with courage to execute it, and, of course, integrity and hard work." To a query as to why he, a boy without friends, should leave his European home and come to Baltimore, he said: "I had heard that Baltimore was not so large as New York and there was a better chance here. Having decided to go into business in this country, I selected Baltimore as the place. The advantages to-day that Baltimore possesses are greater than they were then. This city is now the best jobbing market in the country, and there are more and better jobbing houses than are possessed in any other large city. This may surprise some people, but it is, nevertheless, a fact. The Baltimore Bargain House is helped by this fact, and so is every other jobbing house in the city. Buyers from all over the country are beginning to appreciate that the reasons why prices are more reasonable in Baltimore than in New York or Philadelphia or other large cities is that the business houses of Baltimore operate under less expense than they do elsewhere.

CATALOGUES ITS DRUMMERS.

In the beginning the Baltimore Bargain House handled notions only; clothing, dry goods and jewelry were added, and gradually new departments were taken on until now practically everything in the jobbing line except staple groceries are handled. The house has no traveling representatives except its buyers. Several of these spend most of their time in Europe, scanning the markets for things to fit the trade of the house. The trade deals with the house either through personal calls or by its catalogue. A million catalogues are sent out annually and draw trade to Baltimore from all parts of the United States. Porto Rico, Cuba, the British West Indies and Newfoundland send in large orders, and there is a special export department with a Spanish correspondent to look after the mail and circulars.

CASH OR THIRTY DAYS' CREDIT.

The records of the house show that thousands of merchants are brought to Baltimore through its efforts, and a general trade participates in these visits. Mr. Epstein has a phrase worked into every department of his business that has proved of advantage. It is "More goods for the same money, or same goods for less money." It made a hit, along with other ideas that were worked out. One-price system with all goods plainly marked is a feature that is rigidly adhered to. A rather notable thing is that the entire business of the house is done either on a cash basis or on thirty days' credit, that being the longest terms given to any customer.

GREW FROM THE START.

From the Barre Street house, where the business started in 1881, it was four years later removed to 34 Hanover Street, occupying the first floor, 30x90, and cellar. Two years later the entire building was occupied. The increasing business compelled removal in 1893 to larger quarters at 216 West Baltimore Street, in a warehouse 30x150. This was followed two years later by adding the next-door buildings, 218 to 220 West Baltimore Street. Two years after that the premises 10 and 12 North Howard Street were secured for the purpose of manufacturing clothing. These premises are utilized entirely for such purpose.

SEVENTEEN ELEVATORS KEEP BUSY.

The growth of the business in later years necessitated the addition of the adjoining buildings on Baltimore Street, Nos. 204, 206, 208, 210, 212, 214, 216, 218 and 220, and even this large increase of space did not prove equal to the increase of business, and the property on Fayette Street, 213 to 221, was acquired, buildings torn down and a large modern warehouse constructed. This building is connected by bridges and tunnel with the buildings on Baltimore Street. These buildings contain seventeen freight and passenger elevators and a moving platform which handles 3,000 pounds of freight a minute, besides being equipped throughout with the latest sprinkler system, standpipes and hose for fire protection. Even after this building was constructed it was found necessary to purchase Graham's storage warehouse and

LEATHERBURY, WEBSTER & COMPANY

WHOLESALE MILLINERY AND NOVELTIES

BALTIMORE, MD.

This house was established January 1, 1902, by L. C. Leatherbury and A. M. Webster, both of whom have had years of practical experience with the older wholesale millinery firms. The original location of this business was 212 North Liberty Street, moving, in July, 1905, to 105 West Baltimore Street, and on January 1, 1910, located at their present home, 115 West Baltimore Street. The history of this business has been one of continual success, and, although one of the youngest firms in the millinery business, it ranks and has a reputation for enterprise and integrity equal to the oldest houses in Baltimore. Leatherbury, Webster & Company handle a general line of millinery goods and make a specialty of novelty effects, being in touch with the trade centers of the world. The territory covered by this firm extends throughout the South, which territory is covered by five salesmen, and the house force numbers twenty-three employees.

TALL BROS.

GENERAL PRINTERS, MANUFACTURING AND COMMERCIAL
STATIONERS, BLANK BOOK MAKERS

119 LIGHT STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established January, 1888, by George W. Tall and Otis J. Tall, at the southeast corner of South and Second Streets. In 1891 the demands of business necessitated removal to 23 South Calvert Street, where the firm continued until the great fire of 1904, which destroyed their building and forced them to find temporary quarters at 17 West Pratt Street. In February, 1905, they moved into their present five-story building at 119 Light Street, where is maintained a thoroughly equipped and appointed store and plant. Tall Bros. are general printers, as well as manufacturing and commercial stationers and blank-book makers. Tall Bros. command a large trade by reason of their exceptional facilities and their progressive methods and fair dealing.

Concord Hall for the storage of duplicate stock, but in the recent conflagration these buildings having been destroyed and the city having taken lots on which they stood for market purposes, Mr. Epstein was obliged to look around for another building for the storage of duplicate stock, which he secured at the corner of Lombard and Concord Streets. In 1919 the warehouses at 33 and 35 Hopkins Place were added to the Baltimore Bargain House's chain of buildings.

ONE HUNDRED TO KEEP HIS ACCOUNTS.

Twenty-six years ago the force consisted of one clerk. In 1893 the force consisted of about 200 clerks. Now it numbers over 1,000 employees. Almost as many outside hands are also employed in the manufacture of clothing. The main office is probably the largest office of any commercial house in the United States, over 100 bookkeepers and clerks being employed in the clerical department. The printing plant for catalogues and advertising matter contains about fifty employees, besides a force of artists in the advertising department.

Revised from Baltimore News.

NATHAN SCHLOSS

Son of Moses and Yetta Schloss, was born in Adelsberg, Bavaria, Germany, on the 22d of February, 1856. He received his education in both private and public schools and began the active work of life at the age of fourteen, and is at present engaged in the wholesale clothing manufacturing business. Mr. Schloss has been a trustee of Oheb Shalom Congregation, and is at present a director of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. Mr. Schloss attributes his success in life to the fact that he very early realized that he had to make a future for himself, and with this idea in mind, combined with a strict regard for the principles of "Honesty, Ambition and Integrity," he has fully realized his youthful expectations. Mr. Schloss was married to Miss Carrie Lochheimer on the 29th day of March, 1887, and has had two children, both living.

WILLIAM SCHLOSS

Son of Moses and the late Yetta Schloss, was born in Germany in 1861. Was educated in the public schools, also received private religious instructions. Later he studied the science of cutting and tailoring, beginning his business career at the age of thirteen with the firm of Blum, Hechinger & Co., clothing manufacturers, and later became associated with the firm of Schloss Bros. & Co., of which he is now a member. He attends the Oheb Shalom Congregation. Mr. Schloss married Miss Ida Stein and has no children.

MICHAEL SCHLOSS

Son of Moses and the late Yetta Schloss, was born in Germany in 1865. He was educated in the public and religious schools, and graduated from a business college. At the age of thirteen he was an errand boy for Stein & Co., wholesale clothiers, and with his brothers formed the firm of Schloss Bros. & Co., of which he is a member. In addition to his connection with the celebrated clothing firm, Mr. Schloss has taken quite an active interest in other corporations and institutions, he at present being president of The Baltimore Refrigerator and Heating Company and vice-president of the Calvert Mortgage and Deposit Company, vice-president of the National City Bank, and for many years a director in the Third National Bank; also appointed by the Governor as one of the labor commissioners. Mr. Schloss attends the Oheb Shalom Temple, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic and the Bnai Brith orders, while socially he is connected with the Phoenix and Suburban Clubs.

THEODORE MOTTU & CO.

LUMBER

1022 PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, BALTIMORE, MD.

Theodore Mottu & Co. was established in 1850 and is one of Baltimore's oldest lumber houses. The present members of the firm of Theodore Mottu & Co. are Thomas H. Mottu and Theodore Mottu. The firm has had but one location during the sixty years of its career, viz., 1022 Pennsylvania Avenue. Theodore Mottu & Co. are dealers in building lumber of all descriptions and carry in their yard at all times a most complete stock of standard lines.

GEORGE KIPP & SON

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN LEATHER AND SHOE FINDINGS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The old house of George Kipp & Son was established in 1860 by George Kipp. In 1879 John M. Kipp was taken into the firm, and in 1900 Fred M. Kipp succeeded the business and is now the sole owner. The original establishment was at 1607 Eastern Avenue, to which has since been added 1605 and 1612 Eastern Avenue, so that the present establishment occupies 1605, 1607 and 1612 Eastern Avenue. George Kipp & Son are wholesale and retail dealers in leather and shoe findings, cut soles, shoe store supplies and upper manufacturers. The house of Kipp & Son has grown to its present position by methods of absolute integrity and fair dealings.

JONAS SCHLOSS (DECEASED)

Jonas Schloss was the son of Moses and the late Yetta Schloss and was born in Germany in the year of 1866. He was educated in the public and religious schools, in addition to receiving private instruction. He started in business life at the age of seventeen years, with Schloss Bros. & Co., and of which he later became a member. Mr. Jonas Schloss died in 1908, leaving behind him a memory which will live long in the hearts of those who knew him. It has been said of Jonas Schloss that "he was unquestionably one of the noblest men God ever placed on earth." A most perfect son, husband, father and brother, beloved by all who knew him, without exception. A man of remarkable strong character, fixed principles, and yet with all of the most kindly disposition. He was an indefatigable worker and possessed a most brilliant mind, notwithstanding which, however, he was a man of the most extraordinarily modest and retiring disposition. Mr. Schloss is survived by a widow, who was Miss Rene Heineman, and two sons, Monroe and Julius, both living.

JULIUS SCHLOSS

Son of Moses and the late Yetta Schloss, was born in Germany in 1867, receiving a public school and business college education. At the age of sixteen he entered the employ of Schenthal & Greenbaum, later becoming a member of the firm of Schloss Bros. & Co. Mr. Schloss is a member of the Phoenix and Suburban Clubs and attends Shearith Israel Congregation. Mr. Schloss married Miss Florence Whitehill and has one child, Helene, living.

MEYER SCHLOSS

Son of Moses and the late Yetta Schloss, was born in Baltimore City in the year of 1873, receiving a public school and religious education. At the age of seventeen he began his business life as stock clerk of Schloss Bros. & Co., of which firm he is now a member. Mr. Schloss attends the Shearith Israel Temple. He married Miss Bertie Frank and has two children, Irving and Hilda, both living.

LOUIS J. SCHLOSS

Louis J. Schloss was born in Germany in 1860; received his education in the public schools. At the age of seventeen he entered the employ of Rosenberg & Co., later Stern, Rosenberg Co., of New York. He attends the New York Lexington Avenue Temple, and is a member of the Frohsin and Progress Clubs of New York City, where at present he resides. Mr. Schloss married Miss Sophie Schloss (sister of the Schloss Brothers) and has three children, Leilia, Madelon and Ruth, all living.

ALBERT L. FRANK

Son of Caroline and the late Moses Frank, was born in St. Louis, 1871; received his education in public and private schools and began business career with Schloss Bros. & Co. when fifteen years of age, of which firm he is now general manager, also treasurer of Wigmore & Kenefick Co., of Middletown, Conn., and president Frank Realty and Investment Co. Mr. Frank attends Chizuk Emunah Synagogue.

SCHLOSS BROTHERS & COMPANY

Wholesale Clothing Manufacturers

BALTIMORE, MD.

Schloss Bros. & Co. were established in 1885 by Nathan, Michael, William, Julius and Jonas Schloss, all of whom prior to which time had been employed as clerks in various positions with other firms. Mr. Louis J. Schloss and Mr. Meyer Schloss have since been admitted to the firm. Mr. Jonas Schloss died in 1908. The original location of this business was on Baltimore near Hanover Streets. The business was successful from the beginning and has grown to such proportions that it taxes the capacity of two immense factories, one at the corner of Baltimore and Paca Streets and the other on Low Street, running from High to Exeter Streets, the former building being a seven-story structure with floor space 120 by 105 feet, or a total floor area of 86,200 square feet. The latter building commands six stories, 90 by 251 feet, or a total floor space of 135,540 square feet. This new factory is conceded by experts to be the most perfectly equipped and arranged tailoring workrooms in the world. Schloss Bros. & Co. are manufacturers of clothing and have a capacity to produce $5,000,000 worth of fine, high-grade ready-to-wear clothing annually. The number of operatives employed is 4,000 and the number of traveling men thirty-six, who cover every State and Territory in the country; as it is the proud claim of Schloss Bros. that there is not a single State or Territory in the United States in which they do not sell their famous clothing. The aim of Schloss Bros. & Co. is to perpetuate the high standing of the firm for honorable dealings and to maintain the superlative quality of the clothing produced.

PHILIP HERZBERG

Philip Herzberg was born on February 14, 1822, in the town of Klingenberg au Main, Bavaria, Germany. He came to Baltimore in 1840, and later established the firm of Philip Herzberg & Co., which conducted a manufacturing wholesale and retail clothing business on Marsh-Market Space until 1888, when Mr. Herzberg retired from active business.

Mr. Herzberg has been actively identified with Jewish congregational and charitable life in Baltimore. He was one of the organizers of the Eden Street Congregation, and its treasurer for a number of years. Subsequently he joined the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, from which he resigned, because of its "Reform" tendencies, in 1870. In that year he, the late Jonas Friedenwald, and others organized the Chizuk Emunoh Congregation. He was treasurer of this synagogue for a number of years, and rendered valuable services when the building on Lloyd Street was constructed.

Mr. Herzberg is the only survivor of that band of men who, in 1846, started the United Hebrew Assistance Society, which name, as well as its charter, was changed in 1856 to the Hebrew Benevolent Society of Baltimore. Mr. Herzberg served as president of this institution for twelve consecutive years, from 1878 to 1890, and until a recent date was the only living ex-president. He has been officially associated with the society since its inception and is now an honorary life member of the board. Mr. Herzberg also has been actively connected with the Hebrew Hospital and Asylum Association, the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, the Hebrew Educational Society, the Free Burial Society, the Alliance Israelite Universelle, and other charitable associations.

Mr. Herzberg's activities have not been confined to sectarian institutions. He has taken part in various civic endeavors. Mr. Herzberg, in conjunction with Rev. Dr. H. Hochheimer and Col. Mendes I. Cohen, called a convention of prominent Israelites of America, which met in Baltimore, and drafted a memorial to President Buchanan petitioning the chief magistrate to insert a provision in the then pending Swiss treaty respecting the removal of the disabilities directed against the Israelites. Mr. Herzberg was a member of the committee which presented the memorial to President Buchanan, and addressed the chief executive.

Mr. Herzberg became a member of Washington Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., in 1845 and is Past Grand of the lodge.

DR. ABRAHAM SAMUELS.

Son of Samuel Samuels and Sarah Meyenberg (née Bernheimer) Samuels, was born in the city of Baltimore on the 27th day of August, 1875. He was educated in the Baltimore city public schools and graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1898, and has received the degree of Bachelor of Arts (Honorary). Dr. Samuels began his active work of life by serving an apprenticeship in a drug store, and is now a practicing physician, and has had connections with the City Hospital, Bay View Asylum, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Hebrew Hospital and Mercy Hospital. He is a member of the Phi Chi Research Club, American Medical Association, Medical and Chirurgical faculty of Maryland and Baltimore City Medical Society. Has been resident physician at the City Hospital and Hebrew Hospital and is now Associate Professor Diseases of Women, College of Physicians and Surgeons, and Associate Editor of the Maryland Medical Journal. Dr. Samuels gives as the most valuable lesson he has learned in life the following: "From failures come success; and to be successful hard work and absolute honesty are necessary." On March 30, 1903, Dr. Samuels married Roseleah Cushman Bloomberg, of New York City. Graduated from Maryland Pharmacy 1895.

SIMON ROSENBERG

Son of Abraham and Sarah Rosenberg, was born in Baltimore February 12, 1845, receiving his education in private schools. In 1865 Mr. Rosenberg was a merchant and later became a banker. He attends the Madison Avenue Temple. Mr. Rosenberg married Miss Bertha Frank February 12, 1879, and has had three children, Mrs. Adolf Rosenberg, Mrs. Enrico N. Stein and Abel A. Rosenberg, all living.

John B. Adt, manufacturer of tobacco machinery, elevators and general machinery, established in 1865 and located at 332-342 N. Holliday Street, this city, since 1873, is one of the leading manufacturers of machinery in this city; the products of this factory are being shipped to all countries of the world and locally enjoy a high reputation in the quality and workmanship of their manufacture.

The shops are equipped with the most up-to-date machinery and tools for the manufacture of tobacco machinery as a specialty, factory and warehouse elevators and a general line of machinery, reaching into all branches of trade, and in connection with the manufacturing plant, this firm has also a branch house for the handling of machinists' and plumbers' supplies, having a large warehouse for this purpose, located at the southwest corner of Holliday and Pleasant Streets.

Mr. John B. Adt, the senior member of the firm, having withdrawn from the active participation in the business, same is now conducted by his sons, Albert W. Adt and Edwin B. Adt.

DAVID BACHRACH

Son of David and Sarah Bachrach, was born in Hesse Cassel, Germany, July 16, 1845. He was educated in the public and high school in Hartford, Conn., and began business life as an apprentice to a photographer in Baltimore. Mr. Bachrach formulated the first practical process of making direct photo prints on painters' canvas, and is the inventor of the self-toning process in photography, which is the foundation of all present self-toning papers. Towards the close of the Civil War Mr. Bachrach was on the staff of St. John's College Hospital, with rank of lieutenant, to photograph the cases of Andersonville prisoners. He served on the Annexation Committee in 1888 and at various times on the Federal and State Grand Juries. Mr. Bachrach is a profound reader and the works which he has found most useful to him are those of John Stuart Mill and Henry George. He has written many practical articles for photographic magazines and is a great believer in "The square deal" as the surest means of promoting human happiness. Mr. Bachrach is a Mason and an Odd Fellow, and associated with Har Sinai Congregation. In 1877 Mr. Bachrach married Miss Fanny Keyser and has had four children, three of whom are living.

H. Irvine Keyser	C. C. Buckman	Charles Adler	Thos. H. Symington

THE MERCANTILE TRUST & DEPOSIT COMPANY OF BALTIMORE

The Mercantile Trust & Deposit Company of Baltimore was organized under an Act of the Legislature of Maryland in 1884. General John Gill, its founder, has been its president for the twenty-five years of its existence. Associated with him have been such leaders in the business world as Enoch Pratt, W. W. Spence, C. Morton Stewart, Charles D. Fisher, Bernard Cahn, Louis McLane, Alexander Frank, Alexander Shaw, Andrew Reid and John A. Hambleton—all men who carved their way to success and were leaders in their generation.

A general banking and safe-deposit business is carried on by the company, also a separate and distinct department, thoroughly organized to take charge of estates, look after the collection of house and ground rents, collect coupons and interest, act as executor or administrator of estates, as guardian of minor children, or as receiver; in general, the company is authorized to accept any trust under the laws of any State or of the United States. It further acts as trustee of mortgages, as registrar and transfer agent, issues letters of credit and foreign exchange available in all parts of the world, and is the legal depository for court and trust funds.

Officers of the company are: John Gill, of R., president; Wilton Snowden, vice-president; A. H. S. Post, second vice-president; John McHenry, treasurer; Jos. R. Walker, secretary; T. H. Fitchett, assistant secretary and treasurer.

BENJAMIN HENRY HARTOGENSIS

Benjamin Henry Hartogensis, the son of Henry S. and Rachel de Wolff Hartogensis, was born in Baltimore on the 9th of April, 1865. Completing his elementary and secondary education in the public schools and at the Baltimore City College, he entered the Johns Hopkins University, where he was awarded a Hopkins scholarship, and from which he was graduated in 1886. After a year of graduate work at the Hopkins, he followed, for a short time, the profession of an analytical chemist. In 1887 Mr. Hartogensis became associate editor of the Jewish Exponent, of Philadelphia, sharing for twelve years the editorial responsibilities and burdens of the entire paper, besides representing the journal in Baltimore. From 1890 to 1896, he was one of the editors of the Baltimore American; a little earlier he had been on the editorial staff of the Baltimore Sun. While engaged in this work, Mr. Hartogensis had been studying at the Baltimore University School of Law; in December, 1893, he was admitted to the bar, and three years later he began the active practice of the law, forming, with Mr. Louis H. Levin, the firm of Levin & Hartogensis, which was dissolved in 1906. On June 10, 1896, Mr. Hartogensis was married to Miss Grace Bendann. Mrs. Hartogensis died May 20, 1900, survived by a daughter.

Mr. Hartogensis assisted, in 1888, in establishing in Baltimore a branch of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, and he has been the secretary of the local branch since 1894. He is president of the Baltimore branch of the Jewish Territorial Organization, which he also assisted in founding, and is the honorary counsel of the Federation of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of Baltimore City. Mr. Hartogensis's most notable work for Baltimore and its Jews has been in connection with the Russian night school. In 1887 he began to take an active interest in the Hebrew Literary Society, under whose auspices the school was founded; and subsequently he became a member of the Russian night school committee (1889-97). Attending regularly the nightly sessions of the school, he aided, with Miss Henrietta Szold and Miss Grace Bendann, in making five thousand Russian Jewish immigrants intelligent American citizens. His interest in this cause has not lapsed; he is actively interested in the night schools conducted by the city, whose establishment he advocated as the logical development of the work of the Russian night school committee. Mr. Hartogensis was appointed by Governor Crothers a delegate for the State of Maryland to the convention at Atlanta (October, 1908) for the advancement of industrial education. He is Past Chancellor of Pythagorean Lodge, Knights of Pythias.

Among public addresses delivered by Mr. Hartogensis are: "A History of Intolerance in Maryland," published in the Jewish Exponent; "The Loyal Jew, the Best Patriot," a Fourth of July address, delivered in 1907 to the colonists at Woodbine, N. J., afterwards translated into French and published for private circulation by the Alliance Israelite Universelle; and a paper on "Consanguineous Marriages at Jewish and American Law," read at a meeting of the American-Jewish Historical Society in February, 1910. An essay, "Did the Jews or Romans Kill Jesus?" published in the Baltimore Sun, April 19, 1909, et seq., attracted a great deal of attention and comment.

DR. HARRY ADLER.

Son of Charles and Caroline Adler, was born in Baltimore City on the 11th day of August, 1872. Mr. Adler attended the Baltimore public schools, the Johns Hopkins University, from which he graduated in 1892, receiving the degree of A.B., and the University of Maryland School of Medicine, from which he graduated in 1895, after which he took up two years' post-graduate work in Berlin, Vienna and Prague, beginning active practice in 1897. Dr. Adler was director of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum and Hospital, 1905-6, and president of the same institution 1905-1909, director Federated Jewish Charities and Jewish Home of Consumptives, member of the Endowment Committee of the University of Maryland, clinical professor of medicine and director of Clinical Laboratory, University of Maryland, visiting physician on diseases of stomach and intestines, Hebrew Hospital. On June 16, 1899, Dr. Adler married Miss Carrie Frank and has one child living.

PERPETUAL AND TRANSIENT INSURANCE

The Baltimore Equitable Society, organized 115 years ago, has been continuously conducting a fire insurance business in this city, paying losses to many generations embraced in that long period. It is the oldest company in Maryland.

Its losses during the great fire of February, 1904, were over $1,915,000, which were promptly paid, leaving the society in a sound and prosperous condition.

The society has made a feature of issuing perpetual policies on dwellings, stores, ground rents and furniture, which have great advantages in permanency and economy.

A deposit of $20 and upwards per thousand secures a perpetual policy on a dwelling. This deposit can be withdrawn by the insured at any time, according to the terms of the policy, which are very plain and liberal and free from all ingenious technicalities. These policies are held by thousands of our citizens, many of them having been transferred from preceding generations. Their reliability and permanency are maintained by substantial assets which have proved entirely sufficient under the ordinary and extraordinary changes and conditions of over a century.

Perpetual policies on furniture are issued upon a deposit of $40 and upwards per thousand dollars, and on stores at $25 and upwards per thousand dollars.

We invite you to call at the office of the society for further particulars, or write for the same, when our representative will call upon you with such information as you may desire.

REV. JACOB SCHVANENFELD

Son of Samuel Schvanenfeld, a merchant, and his wife, formerly a Miss Scheindel, was born at Letownia, Austria, on October 16, 1880. He received his education in the New York public schools, the Baltimore City College, Baltimore Law School and the New York Conservatory of Music. His first active work in life was that of choir boy. He was cantor in the congregation of Anshe Chesed from 1898 to 1900, in the congregation of Sharai Zedek, Harlem from 1900 to 1904, and in Baltimore from 1904 to the present time as cantor of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. Mr. Schvanenfeld is a member of the Royal Arcanum and Knights of Pythias. "To say little and do much; to be sincere in what you do; to interest yourself in communal work" are principles Mr. Schvanenfeld has ever kept in view and to which he attributes a large part of his success in life. Mr. Schvanenfeld is not married.

BENJAMIN FRIEDMANN

Son of Menka and Caroline Prager Friedmann, was born on March 12, 1861, in the city of Baltimore. He received his education in the public schools of the city, and upon its conclusion entered, in 1876, into the clothing business of his father—the firm of M. Friedmann & Sons. Mr. Friedmann is now identified with the Baltimore Capsule Co. He is past master and high priest of the Masonic Order, an Odd Fellow and a member of the Phoenix Club. He has been president of Standard Circle, and at the present time holds the office of treasurer of the Chizuk Emunah Congregation. Mr. Friedmann regards his success in life to be the outcome of perseverance.

FREDERICK H. GOTTLIEB.

Son of Emanuel and Rosalia Fischer Gottlieb, was born at Nagywarad, Hungary, on the 12th day of October, 1852. His education was received in Europe, and his business life began at the age of fourteen years. Mr. Gottlieb is vice-president of the G. B. S. Brewing Company and is president of the Charcoal Club and president of the Journalist Club. On June 6, 1876, he married Miss Christine B. Butterfield and has four children, Mary Watson, Esther B., Minda Ellinworth and Janet Patterson Gottlieb.

MOSES FRANK.

Son of Henry and Sarah Frank, was born in Baltimore on the 20th day of July, 1844. He was educated in private schools, and at the age of thirteen clerked with his father. At the age of twenty-one he started in business on his own accord and retired at the age of fifty. Mr. Moses Frank is president of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. On November 26, 1871, he married Isabella Cohen and has had six children, five of whom, Eli, Carrie, Harry, Sadie and Minnie, are living.

MAX HOCHSCHILD.

Son of Samuel and Gretchen Hochschild, was born at Gross Rohrheim, Germany, on June 14, 1855. He was educated in the public country schools of Germany, and came to Baltimore March 15, 1870. From 1870 to 1876 he was a clerk, since which time he has been in business on his own account—from 1876 to 1897 alone and from 1897 to the present time a member of the firm of Hochschild, Kohn & Co. Mr. Hochschild is a member of Har Sinai Temple and a director of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. On March 30, 1887, he married Miss Lina Hamburger and has had two children, both living.

HUGHES FURNITURE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Manufacturers of

Chamber Suits, Chiffoniers, Hall Racks, Wardrobes, Ladies' Toilets, Enameled Goods, Etc.

LOCUST POINT, BALTIMORE, MD.

The Hughes Furniture Manufacturing Company was incorporated in February, 1895, through the efforts of Jacob Hughes, who, prior to his connection with this company, had been identified with the furniture manufacturing business for twenty-five years, having formerly been associated with the firm of Geelhaar, Hughes & Co., which company, after a period of two years' existence, was absorbed by the Atlantic Furniture Manufacturing Company, in which corporation he was active in the management until his withdrawal from same, after which he formed the Hughes Furniture Manufacturing Company, which is located at Locust Point and occupies the entire block bounded by Haubert, Marriott, Decatur and Beason Streets, giving employment to 125 hands.

For five years this company confined itself to manufacturing cheap and medium grade goods, and in the year 1900, due to the increasing demand for better furniture, they re-equipped their entire plant, since which time they have devoted their entire efforts toward the betterment of the furniture industry of Baltimore.

At present the line consists of chamber suits, odd dressers, chiffoniers, toilet tables, wardrobes and hall racks, made in quartered oak, mahogany, birdseye maple and Circassian walnut, which has impressed the trade favorably, and has met with unbounded success. The territory covered embraces New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and the entire South.

SHIPMENT OF A CARGO OF SEA MOSS

V. W. WINCHESTER

Manufacturer and Jobber of

Excelsior, Upholstering and Bedding Supplies

517 SOUTH SHARP STREET

This business was originally established in 1835 by Harman Classen, and subsequently the firm became H. Classen & Son, with the admission of Benjamin H. and Frederick W. Classen; they were widely known as purveyors of forage for the Government. Mr. Frederick W. Classen died in 1887, and Mr. Harman died in 1889. Mr. Benjamin Classen retired in 1899. The business was then succeeded by the present member, Mr. V. W. Winchester. By strict integrity and up-to-date clean business methods, abreast of the times, he has expanded the business to a very large area, particularly so of the class of goods of which he has made a specialty, one of which is the producing of sea moss, for which extensive grounds are required for the curing process. Six sailing boats are used and twenty-five men employed in getting this moss ready for market. This product is shipped all over the country, and is well known by the upholstering trade.

Another specialty is the distribution of Excelsior, representing the Maryland Excelsior Mills, also having exclusive control of some of the largest Southern and the best of the Eastern mills, making Baltimore known widely as a great distributing point on this commodity. Another article of which enormous quantities are handled is the packing and shipment of Salt Hay, amounting to several thousand tons annually.

The very best goods of each class which are used by the upholstering trade, such as Tow, Louisiana Moss, African, American and Coconut Fiber, Husk, Cotton Felts, Kapok, in fact, nearly every filling material that enters into the manufacture of bedding and upholstered furniture.

The workmen are expert glass workers and thoroughly understand the work required of them, and are in charge of an experienced foreman, who is an all-around man, having studied the business thoroughly, including the care of the machinery, which is very important.

The capacity of the plant at the present time is 2,500 square feet of glass per day or, approximately, $175,000 annually, with a reserve equipment, not set up, capable of increasing this amount 25 per cent.

The excellent transportation facilities afforded of Baltimore City a competitor in the northern trade, extending as far north as Boston, Mass., and west to Pittsburg, Pa., or right into and through the great glass manufacturing district of Pennsylvania.

The superiority of the product of the American Mirror Works of Baltimore City is caused by

- (a) Expert workmanship.
- (b) Prompt attention and excellent transportation facilities.
- (c) The quality of the French Polish Plate that is used exclusively in their Mirrors.

This Glass is superior in every respect to the Domestic or American Plate Glass.

The American Mirror Works of Baltimore City imports this French Glass direct from Belgium, in ever-increasing semi-monthly imports, thus eliminating the middle man's profit and permitting the marketing of High Grade Mirrors at moderate prices.

AUGUSTUS CAESAR BINSWANGER.

Augustus Cæsar Binswanger, of the Baltimore bar, corporation and commercial lawyer, was born in the city of Baltimore, April 19, 1875, son of Simon and Sarah (Pina) Binswanger, and comes of German and English ancestors. His earlier literary education was acquired in public schools and Baltimore City College, and his higher education at Johns Hopkins University, where he was graduated artium baccalaureus in 1896. He was educated for the profession of law in the law department of the University of Maryland, graduating from there legum baccalaureus in 1899. While making the law school course he was a student in the office of Mr. Martin Lehmayr, and at the same time tutored matriculants for Johns Hopkins University. In June, 1899, Mr. Binswanger began active law practice in Baltimore; and while his practice has been general, he inclines to cases involving questions of commercial and corporation law. He has attained an excellent standing in the profession, and as an advocate at the bar and public speaker has upheld the reputation gained while a student at Baltimore City College, where in 1893 he won the Wight medal for elocution. At the law school in 1899 he was associate editor for the University annual, "Bones, Molars and Briefs."

During the years 1900-02 Mr. Binswanger was prominently connected with the litigation and settlement of the cases involving new questions of stockholders' liability growing out of the failure of the South Baltimore Bank, and also with similar cases which occupied the attention of the courts from 1903 to 1906, arising from the failure of the City Trust and Banking Company. These cases attracted unusual attention in professional and court circles because of the peculiar questions of stockholders' liability at issue, the considerable amounts and numerous individual interests at hazard, and in their ultimate determination the Court of Appeals of Maryland established new precedents.

In 1903 Mr. Binswanger published his "Married Women in Maryland—Property and Contractual Rights," a work which has been well received by the legal profession."

In 1907 Mr. Binswanger was elected to the First Branch City Council of Baltimore, from the Fourteenth Ward, defeating Mr. Bushrod M. Watts.

He is a member of the Maryland State Bar Association, Bar Association of Baltimore City, Johns Hopkins Club, Johns Hopkins Alumni Association, Baltimore City College Alumni, Union League of Maryland, Phoenix Club, Clover Club, Suburban Club of Baltimore County, Journalists Club, Baltimore Chess Association and various charitable, social and fraternal organizations.

DR. LEE COHEN.

Son of Joseph and Elise Kirshbaum Cohen, was born in Halifax, N. C., on 13th day of December, 1873. He was educated in the public schools of North Carolina, the University of North Carolina and the University of Maryland, from which he graduated in 1895. At the age of sixteen Lee went to New York City, where he remained two years, working during the day and attending night school. In 1892 he went back to his native State and continued his studies as above indicated. Dr. Cohen was connected with the Bay View Hospital as resident physician from May, 1895, to June, 1899. He studied in European universities, Berlin, Prague and Vienna, from June, 1899, to August, 1900. Now consulting rhinologist and laryngologist to the Hebrew Hospital and oculist and aurist to Bay View Hospital. Dr. Cohen gives as the secret of his success, "That personality and tact count for much in the beginning of one's career, and that ability and honesty are essential to maintain any position attained." These, along with earnestness of purpose, go far toward making a man successful in his life's work, and in regard to his own special career he says: "My rearing in a country town, where I practically lived in the open, free to act and without evil influences, until my sixteenth year made me the healthy, strong fellow that I am—which state I believe to be absolutely essential to the development of personal ambition." On the 16th day of January, 1901, Dr. Cohen married Miss Lillian Rice and has two daughters living.

M. PIMES & COMPANY

Manufacturers of

Parlor Furniture, Lounges and Couches

300-314 FRONT ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

Baltimore stands prominently among the great cities of the United States as a centre of furniture manufacture. The abundance of high-class labor obtainable in the city and its excellent situation as a distributing centre has rendered it a desirable point for this industry. There are a number of large flourishing plants engaged in this line of manufacture in Baltimore, and among them is the enterprising and progressive manufacturing firm of M. Pimes & Co. This is one of the old established plants of the city, having been founded over a quarter of a century ago by the present proprietor, Mr. Maurice Pimes. The offices and salesrooms are located at 300-314 Front Street, on site of Old Front Street Theatre. The factory and mill are run by steam power and equipped with the most modern pattern of wood-working machinery and all devices that expedite and perfect production. The firm are manufacturers of upholstered furniture, making all the frames used in their factory. They carry a large stock of furniture of the newest and most popular type. The factory gives employment to 125 experienced hands and the output is very large. Nine or ten salesmen are on the road and a large and growing business is done, mostly east of the Ohio River.

GEORGE CHIPMAN & SON

Chair Manufacturers

BALTIMORE, MD.

The old house of George Chipman & Son was established 1865, by Horace Magne and George Chipman, under the style of Magne & Chipman. Mr. Magne had previously been a large manufacturer of cedar ware and Mr. Chipman the pioneer broom manufacturer and an extensive dealer in woodenware in Baltimore City.

Horace Magne retired from the firm of Magne & Chipman in 1877 and Mr. Chipman continued the business under the firm name of George Chipman & Son, introducing into the firm his son, Henry C. Chipman. Mr. George Chipman died in 1882, since which time the business has been conducted by Henry C. Chipman.

George Chipman & Son are chair manufacturers, conducting a large, well-equipped factory at Boston Street and Atlantic Avenue, with a frontage of 315 feet on Boston Street, which was built and has been in continuous operation since 1871.

Connected with the plant is an ample saw-mill for manufacturing the lumber used in their business from log timber specially cut and rafted from Southern forests to their own wharf. This firm manufactures exclusively for jobbers and dealers throughout Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina.

George Chipman & Son employ 125 operatives and are represented in the field by six traveling men.

ISAAC DAVIDSON

POLLACK'S

ISAAC DAVIDSON WILLIAM B. FALLON
Proprietors

Furniture, Upholstering, Rugs, Mattresses and Bedding

NORTHEAST CORNER OF HOWARD AND SARATOGA STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

This old-established house was founded in 1846 by Abram Pollack, who came to this country from Prussia in that year. Mr. Abram Pollack served in the Prussian Army, and for efficient services was offered advancement as officer if he would change his faith. This he refused to do, resigned from the army and learned the trade of upholstering and mattress-making. His first establishment in Baltimore was on Howard Street, in the block between Mulberry and Franklin Streets. In 1847 he moved to what was, under the old numbering system, No. 96, and now 315 North Howard Street, at which location the firm remained for sixty-two years, or until March 1st, current year (1909), at which time it moved to the magnificent new building at the northeast corner of Howard and Saratoga Streets.

Uriah A. Pollack, son of Abram Pollack, grew up in the business, and in 1864 assumed charge under his own name. In 1875 a new building was erected and the furniture line was added. In 1884 Mr. Isaac Davidson, a son-in-law, entered the business and was associated with the firm until 1897, at which time Mr. Pollack died. Mr. Davidson then assumed the business and took into partnership Mr. Wm. B. Fallon, who had been connected with the house for twelve years previous. The firm name, however, was not changed. In addition to the large and handsome building occupied by the firm as showrooms and warehouse, extensive workshops are operated at 313, 315 and 317 Tyson Street, which employ a large corps of upholsterers, mattress-makers, cabinet-makers, finishers and other pertinent artisans. The firm has been most successful and handles much large institution work and fulfilled a great number of important contracts, such as the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., and in 1907 partly refurnished the new Custom House at Baltimore. The reputation of the "House of Pollack's" for honesty, reliability and high-class wares is widely recognized and firmly established. In fact, the name of "Pollack's" in Baltimore is synonymous with all that excellence, superiority and integrity implies.

ORIENTAL RUG CO.

CATHEDRAL AND CHASE STREETS, BALTIMORE, MD.

Was established in 1899 by Mr. G. Kraft, and has been lately incorporated, and for the past eleven years has conducted business in one of the best equipped plants south of New York, having all facilities and modern machinery for handling contracts of every size. Situated at 1101-1103 Cathedral Street, corner of Chase Street. The business of this company extends not only through the immediate local territory, but throughout the entire South, making a specialty of weaving handsome, serviceable rugs from old carpets and cleaning, storing and retinting and relaying carpets generally. Most of the machinery of this plant has been designed by Mr. Kraft, and constructed directly under his supervision. The character of the work done may be inferred from the following selected list of well-known institutions and individuals whose work is handled by the Oriental Rug Company, viz.:

Woman's College; Entaw House; Mr. Joseph Coudon, Perryville, Md.; Mr. Robert Tait, Norfolk, Va.; Mr. Richards, Doctor MacCormick; Mr. Owings, Mt. Washington; Mr. Whitely, Catonsville, Md., and hundreds of others.

The Oriental Rug Company has always aimed to give satisfactory service and high-class work, and that their aim has been realized is attested by the constant increase of business which comes to this company.

Their large four-story building contains 14,000 square feet of floor surface. The class of work turned out by the Oriental Rug Company has always been greatly admired for its beauty and durability.

BATTLESHIP TYPE OF SAFE DEPOSIT VAULT

The wonderfu Safe Deposit Vault of The Continental Trust Company has become a point of special interest to visitors to Baltimore's greatest office building, the Continental Building at Baltimore and Calvert Streets. It is of the Battleship type, 25 feet square and 9 feet and 4 inches high.

This Vault is built of Harveyized Nickel Steel Armor Plates. The joints of the armor plates are dovetailed and made additionally tight with wedging strips and key pieces so as to be proof against any attack. Weakness inseparable from the use of screws or bolts in constructing the old style vaults has been overcome by this method of making joints.

Guarding the entrance to this vault is a circular door over seven and a half feet in diameter, built of armor plate and weighing 17 tons. The circular door was adopted because it is possible to grind this form of door into the adjacent tronts or jands to an absolutely gas-proof joint, after the manner of a great valve.

Goodwin and George Brown, Jr. The offices were originally located at 26 South Street, but now occupy the magnificent banking floor in the Calvert Building, equipped with every facility and convenience for the transaction of a general banking and brokerage business. The firm maintains its own offices in New York at 49 Wall Street, with which it is connected by private wires, and has correspondents in all the principal cities of the country.

CHESAPEAKE STEAMSHIP COMPANY

The Chesapeake Steamship Company has its origin in the Powhattan Steamboat Company, organized in 1865, which was organized in 1864 as the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Richmond Steamboat Company of Baltimore City, and which, January 1, 1900, became the Chesapeake Steamship Company, operating two lines, the "York River Line," running between Baltimore and West Point, Va., and the "Chesapeake Line," plying between Baltimore and Old Point Comfort and Norfolk.

The York River Line connects with the Southern Railway at West Point, thereby affording a gateway to the Old Dominion and points north, west and south.

The Chesapeake Line's palatial steamers "Columbia" and "Augusta" afford a means of communication, daily except Sunday, between Baltimore, Old Point Comfort and Norfolk, connecting at latter point with rail lines penetrating to and through the heart of the South.

MEYER B. GOLDSMITH

DAVID S. WALLERSTEIN

12 SOUTH HANOVER STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

This business was established in 1893 by Mr. David S. Wallerstein, who had been connected for several years with the old importing and jobbing millinery house of Nathan Rohr, formerly at 21 West Baltimore Street. The original location of this business was at 3 South Hanover Street, which building was destroyed in the fire of 1904, forcing Mr. Wallerstein to find temporary location at 729 West Baltimore Street. In 1905 the business was moved to 12 South Hanover Street, where it is at present located. This establishment is thoroughly equipped with every facility and convenience for the transaction of the large business which Mr. Wallerstein controls. Recently there has been annexed two floors on German Street to meet the stock demands of the coming season. The policy of this business has been to give to the trade at all times the benefit of the latest and choicest offerings of the market at reasonable prices. The territory covered by this house extends as far south as Florida and as far west as Tennessee, and is covered by six traveling salesmen. D. S. Wallerstein is an importer and jobber of millinery goods and novelties of the latest and most approved type, being constantly in touch with the leading trade and fashion centers.

ISAAC DAVIDSON

Son of Levi and Sarah Davidson, was born at Helmarshausen, Province of Hessen Nassau, Germany, on the 14th day of August, 1853. Mr. Davidson was educated at his father's school and had private lessons in French and Latin up to his thirteenth year, when he came to America to live with his uncles in New York, and for several years attended night schools. He started in business life when he was a little over thirteen years of age as clerk for his uncles, and later became a bookkeeper, then agent for a paper mill and later went to Alabama and started a business there, and since 1884 has been in the furniture business in Baltimore. Mr. Davidson is a director of the Hebrew Education Society and of the local branch, Alliance Israelite Universelle. He is a trustee of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation, and for many years chairman of their religious school commissioners. Mr. Davidson's father was cantor and teacher for forty-three years of the congregation at Helmarshausen and was noted for his sturdy honesty, devotion to duty and to his faith, as well as to his family. Levi Davidson came from a family of Chasans, and his wife, Sarah, was a granddaughter of Joseph Abraham Friedlander, rabbi of Westphalia, Prussia. Mr. Isaac Davidson is a member of the Royal Arcanum, the Heptasophs, Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, Travelers' and Merchants' Association, Red Cross Society, Theological Seminary, N. Y., the National Consumptive Home, Denver, and many other societies. The success which Mr. Davidson has achieved in life he attributes to honesty, sobriety and industry, which habits he acquired early in life through the responsibilities which came to him through the desire and necessity to help his parents and his numerous brothers and sisters, demanding that he should practice the most rigid economy and frugality. On March 6, 1881, Mr. Davidson married Miss Adele Pollack, daughter of the late Uriah A. Pollack, to whose business he succeeded. Mr. Davidson has had seven children, five of whom are living.

AMERICAN FUNERAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

OF THE

UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA

Incorporated

OFFICE

1469 MYRTLE AVENUE
BALTIMORE, MD.

The American Funeral Benefit Association was incorporated in October, 1895. This association is the voluntary association of over seven hundred organizations, for the purpose of reimbursing such organizations that pay funeral benefits to the beneficiaries or representatives of deceased members thereof and such organizations hereinafter becoming members of this association, for losses incurred through the payment of such benefits.

Its success has been unparalleled; it has made the weakest organization as strong as the strongest in the manner of paying death benefits. It has contributed more than any other cause to the marvelous growth of the orders.

It deals with the organization, through their secretary, and not with the individuals. In case of the death of a member in good standing in any subordinate body connected with this association said subordinate body will be reimbursed for the amount of death benefits not to exceed $250. Benefits are graded to all members enrolled after the original application has been accepted.

The association is a little over fourteen years old and has not an unpaid claim on its books.

THE GUTH ROMAN CAFÉ

320-324 CHARLES STREET, NORTH
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Guth-Roman Café was established in December, 1904, and is one of the most exquisitely fashioned luncheon and bonbon establishments in the country. This café is modeled after the style of a Venetian garden; in fact is the replica of one of the most celebrated places in old Italy. No expense has been spared to make the Guth Roman Café as cosy and as comfortable as it is aesthetic and beautiful; the idea being to blend with the quaint old Roman atmosphere every modern ideal of efficiency in menu and in service. Here is vended all high class confectionery, and served ladies' luncheon, ice cream and fountain drinks, "catering to the élite" exclusively.

HUTZLER BROTHERS COMPANY

The establishment known to Baltimoreans of to-day as Hutzler Brothers may be said to have come into existence in July, 1858, when Mr. Abram G. Hutzler, senior member of the present company, opened a modest store at the southwest corner of Howard and Clay Streets. Mr. Hutzler was a boy at this time, too young to trade in his own name, and so he used his father's, the firm being called "M. Hutzler & Son."

It was a small, two-story building, with the tiny show windows of the period, but no doubt the ladies, in quaint crinolines and chignons, who came to buy delaine and chintz and feminine fallals generally, were just as keen about the latest styles as are their descendants, who demand real lace and furs of Russian sable.

In 1867, Mr. Charles G. Hutzler, who had been in the jobbing business as the junior member of another company, was left at liberty to join his brother by the retirement of the head of his house. The two brothers, Abram and Charles, accordingly opened a wholesale notion business on Baltimore Street, leaving the youngest brother, David, then a mere lad just from school, to take charge of the retail store on Howard Street. The wholesale concern, thus unostentatiously begun, continued for twenty years, and was successful from the start.

The first enlargement of the Howard Street establishment was made in 1874, when the firm bought from Mr. James Getty the property extending through to Clay Street, known as 67 N. Howard Street according to the old system of numbering.

The retail store, under the management of Mr. David Hutzler, had about this time assumed such proportion that it was too great a burden for one man to manage alone, and in 1884 the other brothers determined to discontinue the wholesale business and devote all their energies to the retail trade. The increase in business made it necessary to buy more property, and four other houses were shortly purchased and torn down, and the present structure was erected in 1886. Still later the property between Clay and Saratoga Streets was bought, and an annex as large as the building of 1886, containing a cold storage vault for furs and a modern lunch room devoted to the store's employees, was added to the main store.

The officers of Hutzler Brothers Co. are: Abram G. Hutzler, President; David Hutzler, Vice-President; Edwin B. Hutzler, Sec'y; Louis S. Hutzler, Treas., and Henry Oppenheimer, Asst. Treas.

MOSES MAURICE MEYER

Son of Gustav and Mina Meyer, was born in Baltimore City March 8, 1879. Mr. Meyer's parents came to Baltimore from Hessen-Darmstadt in 1865, where his grandfather, Jonas Stern, was a rabbi. Mr. Meyer's education was acquired under much difficulty and great struggle, often pursuing his studies under the light of the midnight oil. He first attended the public schools and then the night classes of the Polytechnic Institute, as well as a course at business college, subsequently graduating from the Baltimore Law School in 1902, which he also attended at night. In the same year he successfully passed State Board Examination and was admitted to the Maryland Bar.

During all this period of education, some ten years, he worked during the day as clerk, stenographer, bookkeeper and traveling salesman. On November 1, 1903, he was married to Miss Bertha Stern, and has one daughter. Mr. Meyer is now a successful attorney-at-law and is also president of the Severn Realty Company.

He is at this time (1910) engaged in compiling a work on "Evidence as Applied by Nisi Prius Courts." Mr. Meyer is a member of Cassia Lodge No. 45, A. F. & A. M.; Maryland Lodge No. 1, I. O. H.; German-American Lodge No. 108, K. of P.; Francis Scott Key Council No. 20, Jr. O. U. A. M., and is identified with the Chizuk Emunah Synagogue.

322 N. CHARLES STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

Our business was established in 1780 by Robert and James Webb, the original members of the firm, who conducted the business from that time until 1835 at 180 Fayette Street. They were then succeeded by Geo. W. Webb, from 1835 to 1867, at 48 Baltimore Street; from there he moved to 185 and then to 227 Baltimore Street. William H. Saxton had been working there as a clerk for a number of years and was made a member of the firm. The business was continued until 1876 at 227 Baltimore Street, when William H. Saxton purchased Geo. W. Webb's interest in the business; he then moved to 2 Light Street, and then back to 30 E. Baltimore Street, where he remained until after the great fire of February 7 and 8, 1904, which destroyed a large section of the business district. He then located at our present address, 322 N.

Charles Street, where a very prosperous business was carried on until his death, June 10, 1908.

From then until January, 1909, the business was conducted by the administrators of the estate, from whom we purchased the unexpired lease, good-will and name of William H. Saxton, and after having made extensive improvements in the store we have continued under the firm name of Hughes & Woodall, which is composed of Raymond Hughes and Harry Woodall. Jesse L. Fowler, who was with William H. Saxton for nineteen years, is still with us.

We cordially invite you to inspect our entire new stock of diamonds, artistic jewelry and silverware, and especially Our Optical Department.

HENRY S. HARTOGENSIS

Henry S. Hartogensis was born on Rosh Hodesh Cheshvan, October 27, 1829, at 's Hertogenbosch, Holland; on his father's side he is descended from the distinguished Rabbi Arye Loeb, Breslau, whose authorization of the Rödelheim Machzor is printed on the back page of the Heidenheim edition; his father was well known as philanthropist, scholar and banker, still remembered throughout Holland as Rabbi Samuel, despite the fact that he always refused to be considered in the rabbinate or to allow the Korona to be conferred on him. The banking firm of Gebroeders Hartogensis (of which he was head) had charge of the city "bread" fund for nearly a century, although the township was a noted Catholic center; the last to conduct the banking business there was his brother Abram S. Hartogensis, who, shortly after having been knighted by the queen for his communal efforts, died in 1905. On his mother's side he is descended from the well-known family of Lewyt. When nineteen years old, because of a financial crash owing to the impending French revolution, Mr. Henry S. Hartogensis came to Baltimore to earn a living, arriving at New York after a tempestuous passage on a sailboat of four weeks, during which most of the passengers died of cholera. He started to make his own way up, beginning with stationery, introducing into Baltimore the form of check still used, payable "to order" instead of "to bearer." After a year's residence he married Rachel de Wolff, who, having borne him seven children and helped him in many of his achievements, predeceased him in 1902, aged seventy-seven years. From the first Mr. Hartogensis began to take an active part in communal affairs, and simultaneously in fraternal organizations, Jewish and non-sectarian alike. Thus he has long been known as a Chasan, although never having made any preparation and study therefor, and as such acted in the several congregations with which he was affiliated, always without compensation, until in 1873 he helped to start the Chizuk Emunah Congregation at Exeter Hall, of which he became secretary and remained such continuously until shortly before it moved up-town to McCulloh and Mosher Streets in 1895, while Mr. Hartogensis remained behind, finding the best field for his useful activity near his old home. During this period he helped erect the new synagogue on Lloyd Street, but did much more to build up and strengthen the congregation by great sacrifice of time, comfort and money. He was highly esteemed as assistant Chazan, officiating frequently, and always on all the holidays and fast days. After the congregation had moved away from his home in 1892, he founded, for the benefit of those desiring the Ashkenaz (German) Minhag, a small synagogue, at the corner of Baltimore and Caroline Streets, in memory of his recently deceased son, calling it Zichron Jacob; of this he was president, Chasan and chief mainstay (financial and otherwise), until he removed with his family to his present home in the residential section at the corner of Linden Avenue and Presstman Streets in 1904, after which he affiliated with the Shearith Israel Congregation (Rev. Dr. Schaffer), and at which he has assisted in conducting the services and reading from the Thora, which he continues to do acceptably despite his advanced age and infirmities. So that in 1905 this congregation bestowed upon him the exceptional honor of making him a Chover-Rab and giving him a diploma in Hebrew therefor.

Mr. Hartogensis has always taken an active interest in Jewish charities, so that he has for nearly forty years been a director and continues as treasurer of the Society for the Education of Poor and Orphaned Hebrew Children (Hebrew Education Society); for a quarter of a century he was manager of the Hebrew Free Burial Society and regularly attended all its funerals con amore, doing many acts of kindness to the living and the dead, after the manner of old orthodox Jewry, of which he is a bright example. He has actively taken part in all charitable movements and is known especially for his private benevolences. Among the souvenirs most cherished by Mr. Hartogensis is a miniature parchment, Sepher Thora, written in good form and bearing elaborate silver ornaments and bells, the gift of a Charleston (South Carolina) family for a Gemiluth Chesed shown a son and brother (a stranger to him) who died at Mt. Hope Sanitarium under distressing circumstances and to whom Mr. Hartogensis ministered and brought relief when all others had deserted the unfortunate invalid. In fraternities he has had a long and distinguished career, thus as endowment commissioner of the Grand Lodge, Order Keshet Shel Barzel (now defunct), and for years as finance commissioner of the Grand Lodge, Independent Order of Mechanics; while he continues, after more than

BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY

Bridges and Steel Structural Work

General Office and Works

BUSH ST. AND B. & O. R.R., BALTIMORE, MD., U. S. A.

The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY was organized August 19, 1902, and succeeded to the business of the Structural Iron & Steel Company, which was originally started in a small wooden shop at the junction of Bush Street and the B. & O. R. R. The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY now owns over eleven acres of land, comprising three blocks—from the B. & O. R. R. to Hamburg Street, and from Bush Street back to Gunpowder Street—as well as a number of smaller structures, steel derricks, power houses, etc. The three buildings fronting on Bush Street are leased to manufacturing plants in other lines of business.

A considerable portion of the BRIDGE COMPANY'S business is for bridges and buildings exported to foreign countries. Among such completed contracts are all the bridges on the Guatemala Transcontinental Railway; many bridges and buildings of the United Fruit Company in Costa Rica and Panama; and the largest sugar mill in the world, at Nipe Bay, Cuba. The Company has also furnished a large order of collapsible steel concrete forms for the Isthmian Canal Commission, and last winter furnished at the Isthmus fourteen steel cable-way towers, now being used in the construction of the Gatun Locks. The Company has also recently shipped 18,800 lineal feet of pipe line for the Abangarez Gold Fields of Costa Rica. This pipe was 42 inches in diameter, made of steel plates riveted together.

The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY has also furnished bridges on the B. & O. R. R., N. Y. O. & W. R. R., New York Central, Erie, Boston & Maine, and other railroads; and a few years ago constructed the notable steel arch bridge over the spillway of the Croton Dam for the New York City Aqueduct Commission.

The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY, as general contractors, has lately finished construction of the complete new garbage plant at Bodkin Point, Md., and the United Fruit Company's office and shed on Pier 1, Pratt Street, Baltimore, and is now completing the two story Pier 8 for the B. & O. R. R. at Locust Point, same being 930 feet long by 140 feet wide.

The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY has furnished steel work for a great many buildings in Baltimore, including the Fayette Street extension of the Bernheimers; Caswell Hotel, Hotel Junker, Crown Cork and Seal factory, Masonic Temple, and now has the contract for 2,500 tons of steel for the new Fidelity Building, and it is at the present time furnishing steel work for an apartment house in New York City for the Silverman Estate, E. M. Krulnwitch, Twenty-second Regiment Armory, U. S. Assay office and a new club house for the B. P. O. Elks.

The BALTIMORE BRIDGE COMPANY has a reputation for turning out the best work, and its financial rating is of the highest.

twenty-five years, his beneficent activity in the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, as chairman of Committee of Transient Relief; he was secretary of his own lodge for more than thirty-five years, doing much personally to relieve the sick, the widow and orphans. Standing almost alone, a foreign Jew, he has compelled attention to his demands that the principles of non-sectarianism of the orders be vigorously adhered to, so that changes of the Christological references in the ritual, in oaths and obligations and in funeral services were made as the result of his persistent efforts; again, in the Order of Mechanics, he prevented the formation of a Christian side-order, much like the Knights of Templar in its relation to Freemasonry, for which services he was duly honored by both orders. When he reached the age of seventy-five years both Grand Lodges sent him engrossed resolutions of flattering congratulation. At seventy-eight years he served with distinction on the grand jury, being highly complimented by his fellow jurors in formal resolutions for his good judgment, helpfulness and active service. His high standards in business (he conducts a sporting goods store at 900 and 902 East Baltimore Street) have procured for him the high esteem of the citizens of Baltimore in all walks, notably among the officers of financial institutions; but because of his sacrifice of time for communal work, he has never amassed any wealth. This unselfish devotion to the interests of others without a thought of himself, following closely rabbinical tradition and observances and his unbounded faith in God, he considers as the keynote of his beneficent activity, although it has not brought him success in life in the common acceptance of the term. And this firm reliance on the Almighty stood him in good stead when, in his eightieth year (July 24, 1909), he had to be operated on to save his life from strangulation of the bowels; he declined to allow the surgeons to use any anæsthetic on him, and yet suffered no shock and had no perceptible rise in temperature as a result. His family consists of two surviving daughters, Miss Henrietta Hartogensis, who is of the editorial staff of The Jewish Exponent; Miss Della Hartogensis; Mr. Moses Hartogensis, associated with him in the management of his business, and Mr. Benjamin Hartogensis, the lawyer. There are five grandchildren, three of whom are associated with their father, S. A. Hartogensis, of New York City, in the conduct of the Weiss Manufacturing Company. Mr. Henry S. Hartogensis is a genial companion and an entertaining talker, his familiarity with Talmudic and Jewish lore rendering his anecdotes especially interesting. Moreover, his time, his efforts and his purse, as well as his counsel, have always been at the disposal of the many who came to see him; wherefore he was most serviceable in helping young men in starting their careers.

BALTIMORE, MD.

This Company was established in 1900, by W. J. Lauer and Isaac O. Harper, and in 1902 the firm was incorporated as the Lauer & Harper Co., the officers of which are Wendelin J. Lauer, President; James A. Smyser, Vice-President, and Isaac O. Harper, Secretary and Treasurer. This Company is one of the very important manufacturing industries of Baltimore, maintaining a large and thoroughly equipped plant at Westport, Md.

Lauer & Harper Co. are Contractors, Engineers and manufacturers of Structural Steel for Buildings and Bridges. The capacity of the plant is 500 tons of finished product per month.

Mr. W. J. Lauer began business in 1892 and later, with Mr. J. W. Leroux, formed the Structural Iron Company. Mr. I. O. Harper joined with Lauer and Leroux in 1897, when the Structural Iron Company was incorporated. In 1900 Messrs. Lauer and Harper sold out their interest in the Structural Iron Company and founded the partnership and the corporation as first mentioned. The magnitude of this Company may be inferred from the selected list of fulfilled contracts mentioned below:

RICE BROS. VIENNA BAKERY

RICE BROS. BAKING CO., Incorporated

308-324 N. GAY STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

This old bakery was established in 1868 by Mr. D. H. Rice in an unpretentious way at 417 North High Street. Later Mr. Lewis C. Rice, a brother of D. H. Rice, was taken into the firm under the title of Rice Bros. Co., with D. H. Rice as president and Lewis C. Rice vice-president and general manager. In 1870 the business was moved to larger quarters at 308 North Gay Street. In 1888 Rice Bros. Co. was incorporated, and at the present time the company utilizes nine buildings, running from 308 to 324 North Gay Street, with a frontage of 135 feet and a depth of 240 feet, back to Mechanic's Court. The plant is among the largest in Baltimore and is equipped with every labor-saving device and all the latest improved automatic machinery for handling the flour and kneading the bread, so that it may be truthfully stated that the bread is made and baked entirely by mechanical process. The Rice Bros. plant is a veritable bee-hive of industry, as may be inferred from the fact that the daily output of this bakery is 50,000 loaves of bread and from 10,000 to 12,000 pies. The special brands of bread baked by this company are "Pan Dandy" and "Butter Nut." Rice Bros. also make the famous "Vienna Bread," which they originally introduced in Baltimore in 1880. Thirty delivery wagons are constantly employed in delivering the products of this bakery, and 115 bakers are kept busy to supply the enormous demand for the delicious bread and pies which have made the name of Rice Bros. a synonym for bakery excellence.

THE C. D. PRUDEN COMPANY

SHEET METAL CONSTRUCTION AND FIRE-PROOF WINDOWS AND DOORS

BALTIMORE, MD.

The C. D. Pruden Company, manufacturers of fire-proof windows and doors, is the only industry of the kind in Baltimore. The business was established in 1901 by Clarence D. Pruden, President and Treasurer of the Company, with Mr. Geo. N. Mackenzie, Vice-President, and Mr. Graeme Turnbull, Secretary, and others. The company is located at the St. Paul and Hooding, Corridor & Ornament Co., of St. Paul, Minn., which last-named company was organized by Mr. Pruden in 1894. Appreciating the advantages offered by Baltimore as a manufacturing center, Mr. Pruden purchased the St. Paul interests in the Baltimore branch, which he incorporated under the laws of Maryland as The C. D. Pruden Company.

Since the founding of the business the only changes have been the retirement of Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Turnbull, who were succeeded by Mr. F. M. Davis and Mr. Jos. A. Baldwin. The factory started operating immediately after the great Baltimore fire, and a large majority of the new fire-proof buildings in the burning district were supplied with Pruden windows.

The plant is located on Warner Street, between Dock and Bayard Streets, covering an area of 200 x 125 feet, and is equipped with the latest improved machinery run by individual motors.

In addition to the manufacture of fire-proof windows and doors, The Pruden Company do general sheet metal construction and ornamental work, manufacture cornice, sky-lights eaves trough, conductor pipe, gutter, etc., and their improved methods and facilities enable them to turn out finished products of the highest class at minimum cost.

The output of the Pruden Company is known from coast to coast.

MERCHANTS' AND MINERS' TRANSPORTATION COMPANY

Baltimore has the distinction of possessing one of the largest coastwise transportation companies of the country. Like many great successes, it began in a small way and met some staggering blows. The company of to-day, huge, progressive and successful, is a tribute to American enterprise that will not be baffled by misfortune. By special act of the General Assembly of Maryland, the company was incorporated April 24, 1852. After much delay and many postponements, a subscription list was opened and the necessary capital acquired.

The breaking out of the Civil War in 1861 practically put a stop to the carrying on of the enterprise, and when the "Joseph Whitney" was sold to the War Department as a transport and the "Spaulding" and "Deford," as well, went into Government service the whole enterprise appeared disrupted. Added to its misfortune was the burning of the "Wm. Jenkins" at Savannah in 1864. With no fleet and no business, it is amazing to read that, like a piece of vibrant steel, the company one year after the war had swung back into its original position; in fact, with more business than before. The same year the "Jenkins" was burned at Savannah, the "Geo. Appold" and "Wm. Kennedy" were built, and in 1867 steamers were run from Boston to Norfolk, and thence to Baltimore, and the same route on return. In 1873 the Baltimore-Providence Line, running via Norfolk, was re-established, and in 1876 the Baltimore Savannah Line was established, followed in 1900 by the starting of a line from Philadelphia to Savannah. The Philadelphia and Boston Line and the Philadelphia, Fall River and Providence Line was purchased May, 1907. In June, 1909, the Baltimore-Savannah Line was extended to Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. J. C. Whitney is president of the company. The general offices of the company are located in Baltimore, Md.

ERICSSON LINE

Through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal first ran, some sixty-four years ago, and still continues to run, what is now the only bay steamboat line running from Baltimore that remains independent.

This is the Baltimore and Philadelphia Steamboat Company, which was established in 1844 by John S. Shriver (grandfather of Clarence Shriver, present Baltimore manager) and chartered in the State of Maryland February 23d of that year. The first officers of the line were: President, John S. Shriver; Treasurer and Secretary, H. L. Gaw; Directors, John S. Shriver, of Baltimore; H. L. Gaw, Jr., George Neiles and John A. Weart, of Philadelphia. The line has never changed owners, but has descended from father to son as a maritime inheritance.

The present officers of the Baltimore and Philadelphia Company are: President, John Cadwalader, of Philadelphia; Secretary and Treasurer, Henry L. Gaw, Jr.; Manager, Clarence Shriver; Agent, F. S. Groves, of Philadelphia; Cashier, Charles W. Duff.

The successive presidents have been: John S. Shriver, Gen. George Cadwalader, of Philadelphia; Mr. J. Alexander Shriver, of Baltimore, son of Mr. John S. Shriver; and Mr. John Cadwalader, of Philadelphia, nephew of Gen. George Cadwalader.

The line has long been known as the Ericsson Line, because these boats were the first to use the Ericsson propeller, shaped like a four-leaf clover.

"THE KAISER"

Ralph Goldman, Proprietor

Restaurant and Bowling Alleys

2120-2126 MADISON AVENUE
BALTIMORE, MD.

"The Kaiser" is one of Baltimore's finest and exclusively select restaurants. Mr. Ralph Goldman became proprietor of "The Kaiser" March 26, 1908, and has rebuilt and remodeled the establishment into one of the most superbly appointed family and social restaurants in the United States, as may be glimpsed from the exterior and interior views shown on this page. The cuisine is of that super-excellent quality which appeals to the most exacting appetite with never-to-be-forgotten satisfaction. The surroundings and appointments are in the most perfect harmony and the service is maintained at the highest point of promptness.

In connection with "The Kaiser" is conducted a range of first-class bowling alleys, which enjoy a large patronage. The situation of "The Kaiser" is convenient to the aristocratic residential section of the city, being the only high-class restaurant in the northern section of Baltimore. Mr. Goldman, prior to his connection with "The Kaiser," was widely known in business circles, having been associated with the firms of H. & E. Hartman & Co., Nusbaum & Meyers and The Baltimore Bargain House.

MONOGRAM LUNCH AND DINING ROOM

122 WEST BALTIMORE STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Monogram Lunch and Dining Room, one of Baltimore's most representative eating establishments, was established in 1901 by Mr. C. O. Cairnes, in whose hands the management still rests. The original location of the "Monogram" was the same as at present, 122 W. Baltimore Street. During the great fire of 1904 this building was destroyed, but immediately rebuilt by Mr. Cairnes, and equipped with every modern idea for a first-class dining-room. The patronage enjoyed by this dining-room not only includes the most representative of Baltimore's business men, but is equally well known to visiting merchants from the entire South, being entertained here by wholesale dealers when in Baltimore purchasing their season's supplies.

The "Monogram" is directly opposite the Buyers' Rebate Department of the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association, at the corner of Hopkins Place and Baltimore Street, and on direct car lines to Union, Calvert and Camden Stations and all steamboat wharves.

HARRY M. WOLF

LOUIS H. RETTBERG

Manufacturer of Sausage and Dealer in Delicatessen

Mr. Rettberg started business in a very novel way. With but scant resources and a thorough knowledge of the sausage business he began manufacturing in a very small way at 1926 East Madison Street. His first smoking apparatus was a sugar barrel which he placed on four bricks over a small wood fire; on the top of the barrel he placed a bag and from wire stretched inside the barrel he suspended the sausages.

Putting these sausages in baskets he carried them by hand to the market. This meant repeated trips and entailed much hardship. At the end of six months, however, he had accumulated enough money to purchase a horse and wagon. Mr. Rettberg's business may be said to have been established in February, 1904, since which time his business has been steadily growing until now he is owner of four places of business, including his own factory, killing and curing plant and his residence at 2819 Pennsylvania Avenue. Mr. Rettberg has stalls in Lexington and Hollins markets and conducts a magnificent delicatessen store at 224 North Eutaw Street, where he vends all manner of foreign and domestic delicacies, such as cheese, canned meat, fish, sausage and other dietary dainties.

Mr. Rettberg was born in New York in April, 1864. He was educated in the public schools, and took a business course at Sadler's Bryant & Stratton College.

The trade to which Mr. Rettberg caters includes people in all walks of life, for as has been said: "One taste of Rettberg's sausage makes all the world akin."

The business was started at 521 North Eutaw Street, and later moved to larger quarters at 304 North Howard Street and 119 and 121 East Baltimore Street, then to the present location, 315 North Howard Street, where may be found at all times complete lines of high-grade Pianos, Orchestrians, Talking Machines Music Boxes and a General Line of other Small and Automatic Musical Instruments.

The policy of Cohen & Hughes is to supply Musical Instruments manufactured only by representative and old established houses, at fair prices, and to extend credit wherever justified, thereby enabling their patrons to acquire instruments by paying a small amount monthly, which would not be possible were a large monthly payment exacted. The rule of the house, to allow any instruments to be returned or exchanged when not satisfactory within a period of one year from date of purchase, has won for it a host of thoroughly satisfied patrons, who realize from experience that the safest representation is one that bears the absolute guarantee of the representor.

SHARP & DOHME

Manufacturing Chemists and Pharmacists

BALTIMORE, MD.

The world-famous house of Sharp & Dohme was established in 1860 by Messrs. A. P. Sharp, Louis Dohme and Charles E. Dohme. This business had previously been conducted by Mr. A. P. Sharp as a drugstore from 1845 to 1860, with which Messrs. Louis and Charles E. Dohme were associated as clerks.

Mr. A. P. Sharp retired in 1885, and Mr. Ernest Stauffen became connected with the business in 1880, and Mr. A. R. L. Dohme in 1892, when the firm was incorporated. The original location of this business was at 301 and 303 W. Pratt Street, and at the present time occupies its own mammoth manufacturing plant extending from 301 to 317 W. Pratt Street, 200 to 212 S. Howard Street, and 300 to 316 Dover Street. Sharp & Dohme are manufacturing chemists and pharmacists, manufacturing all medicines used by the physician in his prescriptions. The company employs about 800 operatives, 125 salesmen, and with its office force has in its employment about 1,000 people. Its products are sold all over this country, in South and Central America and England. The aim of the firm has been to make the purest and best grade of every preparation, and to employ only the most competent help, under the supervision of a scientifically trained staff, which policy has resulted in the manufacture of high grade goods only; i. e., absolutely the best. Sharp & Dohme maintain branch houses in New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, Atlanta, New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago.

The officers of the company are: Louis Dohme, President; Charles E. Dohme, Vice-President; A. R. L. Dohme, Second Vice-President; Ernest Stauffen, Secretary and Treasurer.

GARDINER DAIRY

Milk, Cream, Buttermilk and Ice Cream

BALTIMORE, MD.

"THE SIGN OF SURPASSING MILK"

The Gardiner Dairy Company was founded March 3, 1903. It is the logical successor to the Filston Farm, founded by Edward Austen in 1882, at which time Mr. Austen, having a number of imported Jersey cattle, believed that the milk of these cattle would please the people of Baltimore, and as a result he began to market the milk, which found immediate favor with the buying public.

Following Mr. Austen's death, his nephew, Mr. Asa B. Gardiner, Jr., took up the management, and with the continual growth of the business, property at 520-524 N. Calvert Street was bought, and the scope of the business was enlarged.

A year after this, Mr. Gardiner retired from the management and started in business as manager of the Gardiner Dairy Company, and about one year after this the Filston business went into the hands of a receiver, and the Gardiner Dairy bought the property on Calvert Street, and continued to grow and increase the business until it is now by far the largest in Baltimore City. Also they took up the ice cream business, which is supplemental to the dairy business, and put it on first-class lines, from which department comes a very large part of the total volume of business of the Gardiner Dairy.

Within the past year they have bought additional property for stable purposes in order to house their horses, numbering about 100. They have built in concrete an ice cream plant that is second to none in this country, and they now have plans under way for a Milk Building which will contain every modern dairy appliance, and provided with sanitary requirements of the highest order. This building will also be a strictly concrete structure.

The success of the Gardiner Dairy has been dependent on three things:

1st. The confidence and respect of the producing farmers who, working in close touch with the dairy management, have produced a quality of milk for the patrons of the dairy that is not equalled by any other concern in the city.

2d. The confidence of the customers, who, receiving a first-class article, have learned that the management leaves nothing undone to maintain the highest possible standard in quality and service.

3d. The attitude of the employees of this business, who realize that the success of the business will reflect in increased wages and better positions.

The volume of business is now over one-half million a year, and continues to grow monthly.

The officers of the company are:

"FINE MILK FROM FINE HERDS"

WALNUT GROVE DAIRY COMPANY

BASIL GARDNER, Proprietor

Vendors of Superior
Milk, Butter and Dairy Products

2620-24 FRANCIS STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Walnut Grove Dairy Company was established in 1890 by Mr. Basil Gardner. In fact, on December 1, 1890, Mr. Gardner, with three gallons of milk in hand, began a business; which on December 1, 1909, is putting out daily twelve hundred gallons of milk, employing eleven delivery wagons. The milk handled by this dairy is brought in daily over the Western Maryland Railroad, especially from Baltimore and Carroll Counties, where Mr. Gardner maintains his own farms. Mr. Gardner does not use bottles, as he firmly believes that there is more danger of infection from poorly-cleansed bottles than from any other source. Milk direct from the farm and direct to the consumer at the lowest possible price is the policy which has won for the Walnut Grove Dairy Company its high standing in the community. The Dairy also handles butter and eggs and all dairy products.

HYGEIA DAIRY

Pure Jersey Milk and High Grade Ice Cream, Ices, Custards, Sherbets, etc.

CORNER MT. VERNON AVENUE AND 27th STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

OSCAR B. SCHIER & BROTHER, Proprietors

The Hygeia Dairy was established by Messrs. Oscar B. Schier and Carl F. Schier in 1892, for the special purpose of furnishing to Baltimore as pure an article of milk and its products as possibly could be obtained. The smaller dairy building then erected, although equipped with every means of handling the milk in a sanitary condition, has since been replaced by a large structure, covering 150x75 feet, with adjoining yard space covering three times this area.

The milk furnished by the Hygeia Dairy is produced under the most hygienic conditions, the process of which is watched carefully by a graduate of Cornell University, who makes frequent inspections for this purpose. The greatest care in the handling of the milk is taken at the dairy in order to insure an absolutely sanitary product.

Mr. Schier was the first one in Baltimore to give special attention to this kind of work, having been himself especially fitted for it in Germany.

The dairy has always enjoyed the special patronage of the leading physicians of Baltimore.

Men in active business know of the disturbance and annoyance caused them through employees who are addicted to alcoholic liquors or (especially of late years) narcotic drugs.

The result of these addictions is a paralysis of "will-power"—an abnormal condition of the nerve system—an uncontrollable demand for the stimulant used. These men have passed from the stage of "habit" to that of "disease," which demands for its eradication a scientific medical treatment. This is the foundation theory of the world-famous Keeley Treatment, now regarded as the one effective method of overcoming this diseased condition.

Sanitariums using this method of treatment are invariably known as Keeley Institutes, and it is not known or practised at any other establishments. If you would know more about it, a line addressed to The Keeley Institute, 211 North Capitol Street, Washington, D. C., will secure all needed information. This institute controls the territory of Maryland and the District of Columbia, and has no branches whatever.

SECURITY STORAGE AND TRUST COMPANY

13-15-17-19 WEST NORTH AVENUE

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Security Storage and Trust Company maintains a Trust Department, Real Estate Department, Banking Department, Safe Deposit Silver Storage Department, and owns one of the finest equipped storage warehouses in Baltimore, with every facility for packing, shipping and hauling.

The company acts as executor, administrator, trustee and guardian; its officers and office force are daily employed in looking after the interests of estates. The company's charter is practically perpetual, subject to inspection and under restraint of law. The company takes entire charge of estates, and collects the income, remitting the same at regular periods, and has at all times a long list of houses, apartments for rent and also for sale.

The Bank Department is popular and its convenience in the residential section appreciated, as evidenced by one thousand open and active bank accounts. Depositors in the savings department receive $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., paid semi-annually. Accounts, subject to check, receive 2 per cent. interest.

The Safe Deposit Vaults are open 8.30 A. M. to 5 P. M. Safes are rented in the fire and burglary vaults of the company, varying in size, and costing from $3.00 to $25.00 per annum. Three large steel vaults with double combination locks and doors have been fitted up to receive silverware and valuable articles, usually packed in large boxes, barrels or trunks.

The Security Company offers its patrons the most complete and largest fireproof warehouses in the city for the storage of furniture, pianos, china, glassware, bric-a-brac, pictures, etc. The warehouse floor space occupies 97,000 square feet. Over 2,000 two-horse furniture wagon loads can be stored in its capacious rooms. Goods for shipment to other cities are carefully boxed, crated and burlaped; cars are chartered, and the many details of shipment attended to.

The company owns its own hauling equipment, consisting of large covered furniture vans, horses, harness and stable supplies, which is used for the purpose of hauling furniture to and from their storage warehouse; also for hauling from house to house.

The officers of the company are:

HENRY S. KING.....	President.
MATTHEW C. FENTON.....	Vice-President.
GEORGE M. BUCHER.....	Treasurer.
C. J. HAMILTON.....	Secretary.

GRAHAM'S STORAGE WAREHOUSE

S. W. CORNER OF PARK AVE. AND DOLPHIN ST.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Graham's Storage Warehouse was established in 1887 by Mr. George B. Graham in an old building at the corner of Lombard and Concord Streets. At that time there was no other storage warehouse in Baltimore. Owing to the great demand for space a larger and more up-to-date warehouse was planned; the lot at the southwest corner of Park Avenue and Dolphin Street (160 by 150 feet) was purchased in 1890 and a six-story warehouse, equipped with every facility and improvement, was erected. Since that time, due to the continued increase in the business, many improvements have been made, until now there is available 115,000 square feet of floor space, divided into 1,000 rooms, for the separate storage of furniture and household goods. There is also a large fireproof vault for the safe keeping of silver and valuables. For many years the warehouse was under the able management of the late James McEvoy, in whose care the business grew to its present prosperous condition. The Graham's Warehouse Co. are agents for The Bowling Green Storage & Van Co., and operate the convenient Lift Van Service, by which household goods are securely packed in a van in one city and the van then sealed and shipped intact to any destination in the United States or abroad, on which insurance is effected, covering all risks. Eight large padded vans are employed to handle the moving of furniture and effects to and from the warehouse and for general moving from house to house. Mr. George D. Magruder, the present manager, has been with the company for twenty-two years and has a thorough knowledge of the business in all its details.

KAUFMAN FIRE-PROOF STORAGE WAREHOUSE

CHARLES H. KAUFMAN, Proprietor

LAFAYETTE AVE. AND DIVISION ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Kaufman began his business career as a teamster, with a horse and wagon on Pratt Street Wharf in 1886, and had a wagon stand at Park Avenue and Lexington Street, catering to the retail merchants. In 1903 he established a warehouse at 532 West Lafayette Avenue and in 1905 he opened up at the present site in a five story building, 80x31 feet. Business grew rapidly and in 1906 an addition 25x103 feet, also five stories, were added. Three years later another five story building 25x67 feet was erected, west of the first mentioned building at Brant Street; now the Kaufman Warehouse is shaped like the letter Z, and affords a total floor space of 45,000 square feet. This warehouse is fire-proof absolutely, each building is separated from the others—the heavy walls being built of brick with fire-proof roof, iron folding doors, fire-protected windows, metal frames, concrete floors and inside walls. A fire inside or outside of this structure could be easily controlled by a single individual. The Board of Fire Underwriters has approved this warehouse and endorsed it as being as thoroughly fire-proof as can be built. Goods are packed and shipped to all parts of the United States and Europe and even South Africa. Nine teams are kept busy, in addition to an automobile moving van, containing 1,000 cubic feet and holding four loads of furniture. This van is propelled by a gasoline engine, the van floor being covered with Asbestos and especially adapted to long distance and suburban work.

PLANT OF HENRY D. LOUIS

HENRY D. LOUIS

Packing Boxes of Every Description

LEADENHALL AND OSTEND STS.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The box manufacturing business conducted by Mr. Henry D. Louis at Leadenhall and Ostend Street was established October 1, 1907, prior to which time Mr. Louis was a member of one of the oldest box manufacturing firms in Baltimore, and has had already over a quarter of a century experience in his special line of business. The plant conducted by Mr. Louis is one of the most modernly equipped, and has facilities equal to those of any other box manufacturer in Baltimore. This house manufactures packing-boxes of every description, and its trade extends to Washington and nearby points. Locally, Mr. Louis commands a very extensive trade with the large users of packing-boxes and his product, like his name, is a synonym for reliability.

CENTRAL SASH, DOOR AND BLIND MANUFACTORY

SOUTHWEST CORNER FRONT AND LOW STREETS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The Central Sash, Door and Blind Manufactory was established November 20, 1907, by George L. Schoppert and Charles R. Spates. Mr. Schoppert had for twenty two years previously been actively engaged in the sash, door and blind business, during eleven years of which period he was connected with Henry E. Cook. Mr. Spates also was with Henry E. Cook for many years, and is the managing head of the factory and mill, whilst Mr. Schoppert is in charge of the financial and general business departments. The factory of this company is situated at the southwest corner of Front and Low Streets and is equipped with all the latest woodworking machinery and modern facilities to supply any and all demands for millwork. The company employs a large force of workmen and conducts its business on the basis of the strictest integrity and the fairest enterprise. The Central Sash, Door and Blind Manufactory has fulfilled many large contracts, among which may be notably mentioned:

The Court House (Novak & Hirt, builders)	Franklin Building (George W. Bennett, builder)
The American Building (Henry S. Ripple, builder)	Fidelity Building

MANUFACTURERS OF "CROWN BRAND" UMBRELLAS AND PARASOLS NORTHEAST CORNER LIBERTY AND LOMBARD STREETS, BALTIMORE, MD.

In 1898, two Jewish lads, Harry and Simon Ades, aged respectively 20 and 18 years, started the Umbrella and Parasol manufacturing business, in a room 15 by 15 feet at 922 E. Pratt Street. From this small beginning the firm of Ades Bros. has grown year by year, until, to-day, it is recognized as one of the largest umbrella manufacturers in Baltimore and in the east.

The methods employed—honesty and straightforwardness—won for the Ades boys many patrons—and in six months they were forced to seek larger quarters, moving to 33 Hanover Street, from where for the same reason they were again forced to seek larger quarters, this time at 101 West Baltimore Street, where they remained until their factory and salesrooms were destroyed by the fire of 1904.

The present home of Ades Bros. is a magnificent five-story building situated at the northeast corner of Liberty and Lombard Streets, which was erected specially for them. In striking contrast, is this immense factory with its 18,000 square feet of floor space and its 750 operatives, to the little 15 by 15 foot room and four employees which marked the beginning of this house 12 years ago. To-day the output of this factory is 3,000 pieces daily, and 15 traveling salesmen carry the "Crown Brand"—"Ades Protection in Rain"—"Made by Ades Bros."—Umbrellas and Parasols into every state of the Union.

Mr. Simon Ades died April 17, 1908, and since then his brother Mr. Harry Ades is conducting the business alone, which makes it the only umbrella manufacturing establishment of any consequence in the United States owned and operated by one individual. The house of Ades Bros. maintains branches in Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburg, Pa.

THE STANDARD SALT CO.

REFINERS OF SALT

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Standard Salt Co. was incorporated January, 1909; the incorporators being men prominent in the lines of manufacturing, chemistry and real estate. The Standard Salt Co., salt refiners, produce an absolutely pure commercial product that will not lump and is essentially stronger than the ordinary salt of commerce. The plant of this company is situated at 1412 Eastern Avenue, with a capacity of ten tons per day, increasing as the demand is increasing. The aim of the Standard Salt Co. is to produce the very best product at the very least cost to the consumer, realizing that strength and purity are important factors. The policy of this company is winning for it broad trade favors, and its business now extends along the Atlantic Seaboard and throughout the eastern section of the Middle West. The officers are R. Stanley Carswell, President; Wm. H. Greenfield, Vice-President; Alfred S. Day, Secretary and Treasurer.

HARRY ADES

THANHOUSER & WEILLER

311 & 313 W. BALTIMORE ST.

BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established August, 1906, by Messrs. Sidney P. Thanhouser and Charles I. Weiller. The original location of this business was at 834 and 836 Greenmount Avenue, since which time it has moved to 311 and 313 West Baltimore Street. Thanhouser & Weiller are manufacturing jobbers of shirts, overalls and children's play suits, and give employment to from seventy-five to 100 people. The rapid growth of this business and the constant extension of its territory are the best indications of the quality of its product and the merit of its methods.

MORROW BROS.

GENERAL CONTRACTORS

BALTIMORE, MD.

The firm of Morrow Bros. was established in 1893 by Wm. H. Morrow and Charles A. Morrow. The original location of the business was 212 Clay Street, and is at present at 218 West Saratoga Street. Morrow Bros. are general contractors, and have constructed very important works in Baltimore, prominent amongst which may be noted the Y. M. C. A. Building, Baltimore Bargain House, Merchants' Club, Erlanger Building, Hochschild, Kohn & Co., Fidelity and Deposit Company (new building), and many others.

CHARLES W. LEYDECKER

LAMB BUTCHER

Stall: 51 LEXINGTON MARKET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Leydecker established this business in 1880. The original location being Union Abattoir, but at present he is located at stall 51, Lexington Market. He is strictly a dealer in lamb, and as such has gained a most enviable reputation among the particular housewives of our city, and enjoys further the distinction of being the "only" kosher lamb butcher in Baltimore under the United States Government inspection; on which account he is favored with a very large Jewish patronage.

Mr. Leydecker's aim, during his thirty-year business career, has been to sell only the choicest meat, to extend the most exacting attention to his patrons' orders and thereby constantly enlarge his new trade through the expressed satisfaction of his older customers.

WESTMORELAND LUNCH ROOM

314 W. BALTIMORE ST.

BALTIMORE, MD.

This famous lunch and dining room was established, and is maintained, by Mr. J. H. Moxley, who believes that home cooking is only good enough for his patrons. A specialty is made of home-made pies and biscuits; and oysters, clams and fish in season are served in the special "Westmoreland" way. Mr. Moxley, the proprietor, has had fifteen years' experience in the art of catering to that "jaded appetite."

The Window and Office Cleaning Service, of which we are the originators, dates back to the year 1890. To-day it is admitted a necessity which has afforded gratifying results to an appreciative patronage.

Our system is meritorious, being gradually perfected by close application and liberal expenditures of money, to raise the standard of our service as near perfection as possible. In this we have been highly successful, gaining the confidence of the public by faithfully caring for their comforts, which in a large measure has contributed to our success.

In our desire to further advance the standard we never fail to spare time or expense to introduce an improvement in every feature.

It shall always be our effort to conduct the business as to retain your confidence and support, and thereby attain a degree of success which only a liberal and appreciative policy can bring.

We thank our patrons for their favors in the past, and trust to merit a continuance of their good will.

Schindler & Schindler were established in 1909, by William T. Schindler, Jr., and J. Fred Schindler. Mr. J. Fred Schindler, however, has withdrawn from the firm and the business is now conducted solely by Wm. T. Schindler, Jr. The office of this business was at 1009 Calvert Building, and at present is located at 1003 Calvert Building. Schindler & Schindler transact an extensive real estate business, and make a specialty of ground rent investments, in which line they enjoy a high reputation for experience and integrity.

WILLIAM SCHWARZ & SONS

BANKERS AND BROKERS

BALTIMORE, MD.

The banking and brokerage house of William Schwarz & Sons was established March, 1903, by William Schwarz, Howard S. Schwarz and Allen Schwarz. The original location of this firm was South and German Streets, and its present offices are located at 3 South Street. William Schwarz & Sons do a general banking and brokerage business, and are in direct communication with the leading financial centers of the country. Mr. William Schwarz, the senior member of this firm, is president of the German-American Bank.

THE SOUTHERN INVESTMENT AND SECURITY COMPANY

The Southern Investment and Security Company was incorporated by Act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland of 1906, with a broad and liberal charter.

The incorporators were: Thomas H. Robinson, of Belair, Md.; Lloyd L. Jackson, Thornton Rollins, R. E. Lee Marshall, Henry M. Warfield, Joseph C. Whitney and Charles A. Counsel, of Baltimore County.

We organized and commenced business in December, 1906. The officers of the company are: Lloyd L. Jackson, president; Henry M. Warfield, vice-president; R. E. Lee Marshall, secretary and treasurer.

Board of Directors: Murray Vandiver, Havre de Grace, Md.; Thomas H. Robinson, Belair, Md.; Joseph C. Whitney, Baltimore, Md.; R. E. L. Marshall, Baltimore, Md.; Walter R. THE SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE

The Second National Bank of Baltimore, 432 South Broadway, is lineal successor of the Fells Point Savings Institution, which was incorporated in 1832. In the early '60s the Board of Directors of the latter concluded that the institution could be much more helpful in supplying the requirements of the eastern section of the city through the channel of a commercial bank than would be possible for it to accomplish as a savings bank, and it was promptly resolved to incorporate the "Fells Point Bank."

Upon the passage of the National Bank Act, the Fells Point Bank was among the very first to enter the National system, having been incorporated thereunder as the Second National Bank of Baltimore, Md., on May 5, 1864, its number in the system being 414. The bank has enjoyed more than average success, having accumulated, through earnings upon its capital of $500,000, a surplus fund of $500,000, and undivided profits of upwards of $250,000.

THOMAS B. STANFIELD & CO.
CONTRACTORS AND BUILDERS
BALTIMORE, MD.

The firm of Thomas B. Stanfield & Co. was established in 1870 by Thomas B. Stanfield. In the year 1902 a co-partnership was formed by Thomas B. Stanfield and Mr. J. Elmer Stanfield, under the name Thomas B. Stanfield & Son, and continued to do business under this name until April, 1909, when the partnership was dissolved. In May, 1909, the present firm, known as Thomas B. Stanfield & Co., was formed by Mr. Thomas B. Stanfield and William F. Chew.

The offices and shops are located at 109 Clay Street, practically in the center of the city.

Thomas B. Stanfield & Co. are general contractors and builders, making a specialty of all kinds of jobbing work, and are equipped with every facility for the prompt and efficient handling of work entrusted to them, giving the same careful attention, whether the contract be large or small.

The firm points with much satisfaction to its long history, and from among the many patrons of the company, covering its history from the beginning, have selected the following buildings and persons as showing the character of the work handled, namely: Baltimore Belting Company, Lutheran Church of Incarnation, Edwards Chocolate Company (two contracts), Forest Park Church, H. G. Fant, Footers Dye Works, Ford Auto Company, Good Hope Hall, Holland Manufacturing Company, Iron-Clad Manufacturing Company (plant), Kimball, Tyler Company (plant), Wm. J. Lowry, Jr. (residence), F. M. Kirby & Co., Pennsylvania Avenue Building Association, C. Read & Co. (two contracts), H. Rosenheim & Sons, Safe Deposit & Trust Company, United Cigar Stores Company, Dental Laboratory of University of Maryland, Voneiff Brothers (two contracts), Consolidated Cotton Duck Company (three contracts), Wm. F. Zeller & Co., John T. Woodward, Fulton Avenue Presbyterian Church, R. H. Bowman, A. C. Glocker, Wm. Eichengreen, Bernheimer Brothers.

The policy of this firm is to give prompt and efficient service at a fair margin of profit.

WALTER E. BURNHAM

In 1894 Mr. Burnham began business on his own account at the southeast corner of Charles and Lexington Streets as a contractor for all classes of building construction. He enjoyed a large and influential patronage, both directly from individuals interested in building and from the leading architects of our city. Among the notable buildings which Mr. Burnham has erected may be mentioned the New York Clothing House, 102-104 East Baltimore Street; Oettinger & Son's warehouse, Baltimore and Arch Streets; Strouse & Bro.'s warehouse, German and Green Streets; M. S. Levy Building, Lombard and Eutaw Streets; Emanuel Greenbaum Building, 715 and 717 West German Street; Neely Building, 121 South Street; four-story warehouse, 34 East Pratt Street (Joseph Evans Sperry, architect); warehouses, 26, 28 and 30 Hanover Street (same architect); building, 27 West Baltimore Street (Archer & Allen, architects); block of warehouses north side of Lombard Street, between Gay and Fredericks Streets (same architect); dwelling at 1615 Park Avenue (Joseph Evans Sperry, architect). The range of Mr. Burnham's business has steadily extended by reason of his technical efficiency and his perfect integrity in all dealings.

DIGGS-VANNEMAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Men's Fine Shoes

The "Dee Vee" Line

508-10-12-14-16 EAST LOMBARD STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

Immediately following the Baltimore conflagration of February, 1904, J. Ross Diggs founded a partnership with Theodore J. Vanneman, which became incorporated in May, 1904, under the name of Diggs, Vanneman Mfg. Co. Prior to this time Mr. J. Ross Diggs had been a member of the firm of Diggs-Currin & Co., which, on January 1, 1899, had succeeded Young, Creighton & Diggs, which firm, on January 1, 1888, had succeeded Young, Kimmell & Diggs. Young, Kimmell & Diggs was the outgrowth of the old house of Devries, Young & Co. (founded 1870), having succeeded this firm on January 1, 1878.

Mr. Theodore J. Vanneman acquired his first experience in the shoe business as a salesman for Charles Heiser, one of the pioneer shoe manufacturers of Baltimore.

On January 1, 1900, in conjunction with Wm. E. Heiser (son of Chas. Heiser), he organized the Heiser, Vanneman Mfg. Co., and so continued until January, 1904. After this Mr. Vanneman became associated in business with Mr. Diggs, as stated before.

On July 5, 1906, Mr. Vanneman died, and Mr. Diggs has been practically alone in the management since that time, none of the other stockholders taking active part in the business.

The Diggs, Vanneman Shoe Co. was originally located at 9-11 West Pratt Street (Ganter Building), but at present occupies the magnificent structure at 508, 510, 512, 514 and 516 East Lombard Street. There is maintained a modernly equipped and model plant in which are employed a corps of experienced and skilled shoemakers, the excellence of all of which is best attested by the national fame of the "Dee Vee" Shoe for Stylish Men. The Diggs, Vanneman Mfg. Co. do business in the States of New York, California, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio and all the Middle and Southern States, having an especially large trade in the prominent cities, and recently have opened one of many in Ireland. The factory employs 125 operatives and ranks as one of the great manufacturing interests of Baltimore.

THE "DEE VEE" SHOE

has no superior in style and no equal in foot comfort. Being designed along anatomically correct lines, the sole follows every curve, mound and depression of the foot-bottom, which insures rest to tired and aching feet.

Particular attention is paid to the heels of the "Dee Vee" shoe, which do not pinch, thus obviating endless discomfort and final crowding out of the shape of the shoe.

This scientific designing, combined with leathers of recognized durability and finished appearance, and with the utmost care in making, result in a shoe that is faultless and complete insurance against all foot troubles.

To wear the "Dee Vee" shoe is to wear a shoe possessing every essential of custom excellence and the rare combination of exclusive style and dependable quality.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Baltimore is a great boot and shoe manufacturing and distributing point, and foremost among the big houses in this line stands the Baltimore Shoe House, which was established in May, 1895, by Israel Levenstein.

The business started at 2 North Liberty Street, but for want of room was forced to seek larger quarters at 215 West Baltimore Street and later at 323 West Baltimore Street.

In May, 1908, Mr. Joseph Lubin was admitted as a partner, and the firm of Levenstein & Lubin succeeded Israel Levenstein, since which time the business has steadily grown in volume until the Baltimore Shoe House is now one of the leading shoe concerns in the United States, and is located at 307 and 309 West Baltimore Street, which is one of the best stocked and equipped establishments in the East. The trade of the Baltimore Shoe House extends through Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. The success of the Baltimore Shoe House is founded on the rock of square dealing, which principle prevails in every department of its gigantic establishment as with its corps of travelers, so that it is everywhere known as the "Fair and Square House."

BALTIMORE BRANCH

303 MARYLAND TRUST BUILDING

Library Bureau was established in 1876 and incorporated in 1888, the original officers being Melvil Dewey, president; W. E. Parker, treasurer. At the present time Mr. H. E. Davidson is president of Library Bureau for the United States and abroad.

Library Bureau is now operating ten factories. It distributes its products through forty selling branches in the United States, in Canada, in Great Britain, in France and in Belgium. Its employees number more than 3,000. Its annual sales amount to millions of dollars.

Originally Library Bureau was exactly what its name describes it to be—a bureau for furnishing libraries with supplies. It was in 1888 that Mr. Davidson conceived the idea that the card catalogs then used by libraries could be adapted with advantage to commercial interests. From this idea has grown the "New Science of Business System," which has revolutionized business methods and which year by year is playing a large part in the commercial world. It is the application of these card systems to all departments of business which has built up the gigantic enterprise of the Library Bureau. Cognate to its line, Library Bureau installs steel furniture, filing devices and special woodwork of all kinds; the aim being to equip with absolute modern methods, thereby cutting out needless detail and reducing operating expense. The Baltimore branch since 1903 has been under the management of Mr. R. W. Test, whose technical skill and general courtesy have earned for him a strong position in the local business world. The Baltimore branch controls the business of the State of Maryland. The head of Library Bureau is Boston, Mass., and a capital of $3,000,000 is employed in the business.

SEVERN REALTY COMPANY

Severna Park

Baltimore's Sea-Side Suburb

One of the most attractive land development enterprises that has been launched around Baltimore in recent years is that of the Severn Realty Company of Baltimore City, which in 1906 was incorporated under the general laws of Maryland, and began its operation by the purchase of 91½ acres of land fronting on the Severn River, situated at a point where the railroad (the Annapolis & Baltimore Short Line) runs nearest the river. This land was cleared and roads and avenues were cut and graded. The waterfront was set aside as a public park and so dedicated among the land records of the county.

The company offered the lots for sale at prices that were in keeping with a reasonable return on the investment. Soon thereafter three additional tracts of land were from time to time purchased the whole property being known as Severna Park, which under development includes over three hundred acres, with a mile of waterfront. A large wharf was built to deep water for the exclusive use of the lot owners.

The idea of making the waterfront into a public park was an evidence of the far-sightedness of those in control of the development, for at this time it is practically impossible to buy desirable waterfront on the Severn River. In all, it appears that about thirty-five acres have been sold in lots, many of which have been improved by attractive dwellings and bungalows. Cement sidewalks have been laid on many of the streets and roads, and the best varieties of shade trees planted. The increase in the values of the lots, as shown by the prices now and when the development was first started, is but a small advance compared to the ultimate values that must be reached in this locality. The purity, healthfulness and beauty, regardless of the fact that it can be reached in thirty minutes from Baltimore by the Annapolis and Baltimore Short Line (electric), are surpassing recommendations of Severna Park.

M. MAURICE MEYER is president, MR. OSCAR L. HATTON, secretary and treasurer, of the Severn Realty Company, owners, with offices at 111 North Charles Street, Baltimore.

THOMAS C. BASSHOR COMPANY

28 LIGHT STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Among the largest manufacturing enterprises which have been factors in the advancement of Baltimore, the Thomas C. Basshor Company is one of the largest. Founded in 1861 by Mr. Thomas C. Basshor, it was conducted by him alone until 1894, when, his son being admitted as a partner, the style became Thomas C. Basshor & Co. In 1900 a company was formed, incorporated under the laws of Maryland, with the following officers: Messrs. Harvey Middleton, president; W. C. Protaman, secretary, and C. H. Basshor, vice-president and general manager. The office and warerooms of the company were entirely destroyed during the fire of February 7, 1904.

The following is a partial list of concerns, buildings, etc., in Baltimore in which we have installed boilers, heating apparatus, etc.:

Maryland House of Correction	Maryland Bible Society
Johns Hopkins Hospital	Western Female High School
Eastern Female High School	Law Building
St. Joseph's Hospital	Crown Cork & Seal Co.
University Hospital	Maryland Institute
Mt. Hope Retreat	Baltimore Country Club
Wm. Keyser Estate	Suburban Club
Keyser Office Building	St. Vincent's Infant Asylum
Gaither Building	Notre Dame of Maryland
United States Fidelity & Guarantee Co.	Maryland Casualty Company
Singer Building	Masonic Temple
Public School No. 2	Turnbull Building

The offices and salesroom of the company are situated in their new building at 28 Light Street. The large boiler and tank works of the company are situated on Bush Street and the B. & O. Railroad, and occupy the major portion of a city square.

NOVELTY STEAM BOILER WORKS

BOILER, STACK AND STEEL-PLATE WORK

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Novelty Steam Boiler Works of Baltimore, a thoroughly equipped plant, located at 917 to 929 S. Howard Street, is directly on the railroad, and in full operation with competent mechanics, each a specialist in boiler, stack and, in fact, everything made of iron or steel, each striving their best to surpass the past record of the company, which was organized during 1900.

The plant occupies a ground area of 18,000 square feet, and the growth of the plant is the best evidence of the extent the business has expanded. Monuments to the skill of this company are to be seen in every section of the United States, in Porto Rico, Mexico, Alaska, and even in remote foreign countries. While nominally a boiler factory, the company has made a specialty of all kinds of plate steel work.

This company was incorporated under the laws of Maryland in 1905.

BAKER-WHITELEY COAL COMPANY

COAL, TOWAGE AND LIGHTERAGE

KEYSER BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MD.

The admirable situation of Baltimore as a great coal market is acknowledged everywhere. With close connections with the large coal-producing regions and with unexcelled facilities for expeditious handling, Baltimore has developed an immense shipping trade, taking in coastwise and foreign ports. One of the great coal companies of the city, and one which has been a powerful factor in the development of this branch of business in Baltimore, is the Baker-Whiteley Coal Co., established in 1876 by Bernard N. Baker and Jas. S. Whiteley, at 15 South Street. This is one of the largest coal-hauling companies and developers of mining operations in the country, with unlimited capital and resources. A large number of productive mines of bituminous coal are operated in Pennsylvania, giving employment to many hundreds of miners, etc., and furnishing a gigantic freight traffic to the railroads. The output per day is enormous, close to 5,000 tons. All manners of sea, river and harbor towing is done by the company, and its tugs are equipped with fire-pumps and wrecking outfits. Mr. Jas. S. Whiteley is president, Mr. C. H. Brown is vice-president and Mr. E. H. Ray is secretary and treasurer. The offices of the company are in the Keyser Building.

GOLDEN TRADING STAMP COMPANY

109 NORTH HOWARD STREET
BALTIMORE, MD.

Prior to the time the Golden Trading Stamp Co. was established Mr. Jacob Scoll was actively associated in the furniture business for a period of eight years.

The Golden Trading Stamp Company was originally located at 206 Park Avenue. In June, 1908, larger and more commodious quarters were obtained at their present location, 109 North Howard Street.

Mr. Jacob Scoll, president of the Golden Trading Stamp Co., at the age of sixteen years entered into the grocery business at Newport News, Va., and after two years, at the age of eighteen, entered a new field, becoming the junior member of the Monumental Furniture Company at Baltimore, Md.

At the age of twenty Mr. Scoll discontinued his connection with the Monumental Furniture Company, and with his brother founded the Scoll Brothers Furniture Company, doing business in Baltimore, Washington and Frederick, Md. This business venture was likewise a success and is still carried on. In his twenty-second year Mr. Scoll became associated with the Fourteenth Street Savings Bank of Washington, D. C., in the capacity of director, and was in fact one of the founders of this strong and progressive banking house. At the age of twenty-three years Mr. Scoll and Mr. M. Scoll, with K. Millman, established the Golden Trading Stamp Company, Mr. Jacob Scoll becoming its president.

It is one of the largest and most successful firms of its kind in the city. There are 5,000 premiums of all descriptions displayed in their elaborate premium parlors. There are over 1,000 merchants in every line of business giving Golden Trading Stamps in Baltimore City.

GANS BROTHERS

MANUFACTURERS OF UMBRELLAS AND PARASOLS

100, 102, 104 HANOVER STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Established July 1, 1888, by Charles Gans, William Gans and Max Gans.

The nationally renowned umbrella house of Gans Bros. has played an important part in the general extension of Baltimore's business reputation.

The first home of the famous "Born in Baltimore—raised everywhere" was at 46 West Baltimore Street; in 1890 business growth made necessary a move to 115 Hopkins Place, and in 1904 the magnificent factory building situated at 100, 102 and 104 South Hanover Street became what is the present home of Gans Brothers. This structure consists of five stories and a basement—with a floor area of 60 x 90 feet, and with a manufacturing capacity of 7,000 to 8,000 pieces per day. Their trade extends over the United States, Canada and the West Indies. The policy which has upbuilt this extensive business is found in the constant improvement and betterment, both in method and product, which policy has made the name "Gans" a synonym for "Umbrella integrity."

J. SIEHLER

This business was originally established in 1875 by Jacob Siehler and Joseph H. Hebrank. In 1887 the Mr. Siehler purchased his partner's interest and conducted the business under his own name. Mr. Jacob Siehler died in 1903, since which time the business has been owned and conducted by his sons, Charles H. A. Siehler and J. Albert Siehler.

The business started on Aisquith Street facing Jefferson Street, and now occupies an extensive plant at 403-5-7-9-11 West Barre Street.

In 1908 the firm filled large contracts for the Isthmian Canal Commission, Panama, and are now completing a contract for the Navy Department, and besides are supplying large special orders from all sections of the country.

This firm was established in 1873, by Henry Roeser, Wm. Rock, Julius Rudolph, Wm. Hayes and A. Frank. In 1878 the firm was known as Roeser & Rock, and still later the firm's name was changed to Henry Roeser & Son, which is its present title, with J. Roeser as sole owner. The business was originally located in Uhler's Alley, but is now located at 333 South Fremont Avenue. Henry Roeser & Son are manufacturers of oak chamber suits, chiffoniers and sideboards. Henry Roeser & Son have facilities for manufacturing their products from the rough boards to the finished piece, maintaining unquestionably one of the most complete and up-to-date factories in the city, as well as being the oldest establishment of its kind in this section of the country.

GEORGE SPINDLER

This house started in business in 1890 with Mr. George Spindler as the sole owner. The original line covered by the business was the manufacture of mattresses, bedding, couches and lounges, to which has since been added upholstering in general. The original location was 1604 Canton Avenue, where Mr. Spindler was located for ten years; later he removed to 1412 Eastern Avenue, where he remained for five years; then he removed to his present ample establishment, 608 and 610 West Pratt Street. Mr. Spindler is a manufacturer of a splendid line of parlor suits and couches, also jobber in springs, bedding and mattresses, his dealings being exclusively with the trade. The business extends over a large territory and the goods manufactured are of recognized durability and integrity for which the house is noted. This and the prompt fulfilment of orders account for its magnificent success.

JAMES W. RAMSEY CO.

This house was established in June, 1906, by James W. Ramsey, who was formerly with W. A. Tottle & Co. Mr. J. W. Ramsey died in February, 1909, since which time the business has continued as an incorporated company. The office, salesrooms and warehouse are located at 118 Hanover Street. J. W. Ramsey Co. are dealers in wooden and willow ware, crockery and glass ware, tin and metal ware, and do an extensive business throughout the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia and District of Columbia, the territory being covered by twelve salesmen.

THE WM. L. RUHE COMPANY

This old-established house was founded in 1860 by Mr. Wm. L. Lyon, who was born in Baltimore in the year 1832, was engaged in the metal business from his boyhood, and died June 18, 1907, up to which time he was actively connected with the business. In December, 1906, the firm, under Lyon, Conklin & Company, was incorporated, and started in business in this capacity January 1, 1907, with Mr. Wm. L. Lyon, president; Edward Edgar Lyon, vice-president; R. H. Lyon, treasurer, and Geo. W. Wood, secretary.

The business was carried on at Light and Water Streets for a great many years, and in 1904, after the great fire, the firm purchased the property at 13, 15, 17 and 19 Balderson Street, which they now occupy, with facilities far greater than at their old location, where they manufacture the high-class line of tin plates and metals and sundry metal articles.

M. A. KRIES

Mr. Kries established this business in 1893, having been formerly connected with the Schultz Gas Fixture and Art Metal Co. as foreman for fifteen years. Mr. Kries manufactures a fine line of gas and electric fixtures and all kinds of metallic brass-work, and is a brass founder and finisher. This business is located at 303 and 305 West Lombard Street, where Mr. Kries maintains a plant, which in point of facilities and equipment is without superior in Baltimore. Mr. Kries has built up his business on a basis of quick sales and small profits with first-class workmanship to back up every transaction.

FRANK STEIL BREWING CO.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The Frank Steil Brewing Co. was established December 1, 1900, the officers of the company being Frank Steil, President; Fred Steil, Vice-President; Henry Bucksbaum, Secretary. This celebrated brewery is located at 44-46 Garrison Lane, Baltimore, where is brewed the surpassing "Deutsches Beer," "XXX Porter," and "Pale Beer." The product of this brewery is rightly called "Ye old Steil Beer," because that is exactly what it is; the kind of beer that tastes like beer ought to taste, and is as pure as beer ought to be. The Steil Brewery is one of the very up-to-date beer making plants in the country, thoroughly sanitary and equipped with the latest machinery. It has been said that after you once drink "Ye old Steil Beer," all the "new style beers" become old style to your palate—it is just that superior to others in purity and flavor.

WILLIAM C. FREDERICK'S

Ice Cream Plant

1224-1225-1226 GREENMOUNT AVENUE
BALTIMORE, MD.

A quarter of a century ago Mr. Frederick started the Ice Cream business, of which he is yet the head and sole proprietor, at the corner of Greenmount Avenue and Colvin Place. His motto from the beginning was "Keep trade as well as make it, and never betray a confidence." That his ice cream, as well as his policy, has been a success, is attested by his magnificent plant now at 1224 and 1226 Greenmount Ave., covering ground 40x150 feet, with a capacity of 3,000 gallons of ice cream daily.

FREDERICK'S ICE CREAM PLANT

SANITARY THROUGHOUT

The process used by Mr. Frederick for the manufacture of high grade of ice cream is so cleanly that a man in full dress could operate it all day without injury to his appearance. In fact, from the time that the pure cream is poured into the Agitator until it is carried off in parchment-covered cans to the cold storage room, it is not touched by hands or exposed to contact with the dust-laden air. The cream is drawn from the Agitator through sanitary tubes to the refrigerating cylinders, where it is frozen by Cold Brine System. The interior of all the receptacles are German silvered and absolutely rust proof. Only electric light and power are used, and there is a commodious storage room 30x70 feet, with ample shipping facilities.

PURE CREAM

To insure the purity of the cream used, Mr. Frederick uses his own separator and contemplates the installation of his own ice plant in the near future. Mr. Frederick employs an average force of fifteen men, each of whom takes an especial pride in helping to make and keep the reputation of this factory for cleanliness and sanitation at the high standard which has won for it the magnificent patronage which it enjoys. Mr. Frederick has an open door to visitors, and prides himself that he has sold many of the same people continuously during the 25 years of his business career. If it's Frozen and Good to Eat "Frederick" Makes It.

WILLIAM C. FREDERICK

GOMPRECHT & BENESCH

There are few larger and more complete emporiums of house-furnishing lines in the country than the well-known and highly esteemed firm of Gomprecht & Benesch, 316, 318, 320 and 322 North Eutaw Street. This house was established in 1883 as the Eutaw Furniture Co. In September, 1897, the business came under the control of J. Gomprecht, and in 1901 the firm became as at present. The structure was rebuilt that same year, and is a handsome six-story building of brick and terra-cotta, with dimensions of 60 x 140 feet. Here is displayed one of the largest and most complete lines of furniture and pianos carried by any house in the United States. A most attractive exhibit is made of furniture of all styles and makes, for parlor, bedroom, library, boudoir and kitchen uses. A large and varied assortment of carpets, rugs, mattings, oilcloths and linoleums are always in stock. The house is popularly called the "home-making establishment"; and, in fact, a tasty and comfortable home can be equipped from cellar to garret without having to go out of the store. The house sells for cash, or on a most convenient and easy system of payments graduated to suit persons of moderate incomes. The equipment of the house is perfect, and the salesmen are experienced and courteous, with every facility for the prompt delivery of goods of the most satisfactory character. The firm consists of J. Gomprecht and J. Benesch, both of Baltimore.

PATUXENT LUMBER COMPANY

Manufacturers of Portable Houses and Bungalows

OFFICE AND FACTORY, BALTIMORE, MD.

The Patuxent Lumber Co. was established 1907, as a partnership by L. J. Houston, Jr., Lemue Wilmer and W. S. Edge, as contractors and dealers in Lumber Supplies for Railroads, Sewer and Foundation Work and Heavy Timber. Their work with Railroads brought many orders for Portable Bunk Houses, among which contracts may be mentioned a recent order from Claiborne, Johnston & Co., for 5 Portable Bunk Houses, to be used near their works at Cumberland, Md., and West Virginia Junction, W. Va. The Patuxent Lumber Co. are building a Portable Bath House for the Free Bath Commissioners of Baltimore, also have recently completed a 7-room Portable Bungalow, with 2 fire places, 27 ft. front x 44 ft. 7½ in. deep, for Mrs. Frank Baldwin, wife of Mr. Baldwin, with Baldwin & Pennington, architects, a 42-foot Portable Poultry House for T. Dudley Riggs, and a 5-room Portable Bungalow for Col. A. E. Randle, Washington, D. C.

OTTO M. DU BRAU

ARTISTIC INTERIOR DECORATIONS

607 NORTH EUTAW STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. Otto M. Du Brau was born in Germany and studied in Hamburg under Professor Rachee for five years, subsequent to which time he traveled for three years through Germany and England, broadening his knowledge of ancient and modern art. In 1895 he came to this country, and he soon saw his field open to find free latitude for the exercises of his ideas and artistic individuality.

Mr. Otto M. Du Brau enjoys to-day the enviable reputation of being one of the most distinguished and artistic decorators in the country; he has decorated a number of the finest residences and he lists among his customers such names as: Mr. Sol. Frank, Mrs. Chas. Hutzler, Mr. H. Grinsfelder, Messrs. Max Hochschild, Chas. E. Bartell, Isaac E. Emerson, etc.

Mr. Otto M. Du Brau also makes a specialty of church decoration, and he is known as one of the most successful and conscientious men in this field. Among the many churches he decorated may be noted: Foundry M. E. Church, Washington, D. C.; New M. E. Church, Havre de Grace, Md.; Madison Ave. M. E., Union Square M. E. Church, First, Second and Third Reformed Churches, St. Cecilia Roman Catholic Church, German Zion Church, Anshei Emunah Synagogue and many others. Mr. Du Brau is also closely connected with the Baltimore Interlocking Tile Company, of which company he is president.

BALTIMORE BARGAIN STORE, FAYETTE STREET

STONE, DORSEY & PRESTON

GENERAL

Insurance Agents and Brokers

306 WATER ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established November 1, 1907, by Jas. M. Dorsey and Jas. Oscar Preston. Mr. Dorsey has eighteen years' experience in underwriting through the old fire-insurance firm of Maury & Donnelly, having started as office boy and worked his way up the ladder. He has personally inspected more risks and met more special agents than any other man in the city to-day.

Mr. Preston has the experience of a bank clerk and credit man, and for four years was an individual broker. He is fully able to hold his own in any of the intricate insurance branches and is widely known throughout the wholesale district.

On February 1, 1908, seeing the wisdom and necessity of specializing and forming departments, they took two partners, Newell Stone and Jas. E. Godwin, and continued under the name of Stone, Dorsey & Preston, at the same time forming Stone, Godwin & Co., Inc., with the Hon. Wm. F. Stone, Collector of the Port of Baltimore, as President, to handle the liability lines.

Mr. Newell Stone was brought up with the Maryland Casualty Company, and has the experience of an agent and special field man in accident, health and liability lines.

Mr. Godwin, by his legal training, is able to give opinions and interpretations of contracts and agreements which are of vast benefit to customers and his own office. He is also endowed with an enviable disposition and hosts of friends.

This firm has the distinction of being the only insurance office on Water Street, which is in the heart of the financial and insurance district. Their office is a wide-awake beehive, handling fire, life, casualty, marine, credit, sprinkler insurance and bonds, and keeps strictly up to date in all branches. By the above qualifications this firm is better able to handle, through personal assistance, the business intrusted to them than other offices not so well equipped.

Their reputation is made and they propose to build a monument of fair dealings with their fellow brothers and customers and they have this motto: "Never be satisfied with your personal amount of productiveness." Their customers are some of the largest Jewish and Christian firms, as well as corporations, clubs and secret organizations. Telephone C. & P., St. Paul, 5112.

THE CASTELBERG NATIONAL JEWELRY COMPANY

JACOB CASTELBERG & SON

106 N. EUTAW ST., BALTIMORE, MD.

BALTIMORE, MD.

The history of this house extends back to 1853, when it was established by Mr. Jacob Castelberg. The firm is now composed of Jacob Castelberg, Joseph Castelberg, and Albert Wildman. This house carries one of the most complete and general lines of jewelry in the city, and has branches in Washington and cities in Pennsylvania. By reason of the very large output through its various stores this house maintains its own importing department and manufacturing plant, which puts it in a position to offer the very best jewelry productions at the most reasonable prices, and that this fact is generally known to jewelry buyers is attested by the vast and constantly increasing trade which it enjoys.

THE EAGLE WHITE LEAD CO.

The Eagle White Lead Co. was established under the name of Conklin, Wood & Co., which was later succeeded by Wood & McCoy, and on January 10, 1867, the firm was incorporated as the Eagle White Lead Co. The original and present location of the plant of this company is in Cincinnati, Ohio, and it occupies the same ground as it did in 1843, plus additions made necessary by the increasing business. The Eagle White Lead Co. manufacture white lead (dry and oiled), red lead, litharge, lead pipe, traps, bends, ferrules, solder, babbitt metal, etc. The plant of The Eagle White Lead Co. covers four acres of ground and has facilities equal to those of any other plant in the world; its policy being to produce the best possible goods first, and then, if possible, to reduce the cost of manufacturing. The Baltimore office of The Eagle White Lead Co. is situated at 147 North Street.

J. H. THIEMEYER COMPANY

A very important part in the business of Baltimore is filled by the enterprising and progressive box manufacturing company of J. H. Thiemeyer Company. Boxes enter into a vast field of uses with manufacturers and jobbers, and the supply of the canneries alone is an enormous business of itself. This company is an incorporation of the old firm of J. H. Thiemeyer & Co., which was founded by Mr. J. H. Thiemeyer in 1848. The incorporation took place in January, 1904, under the laws of Delaware, with a capital stock of $75,000. The plant is located at 901 South Caroline Street on what is styled the back basis, and covers the greater part of a city block, about 300 by 300 feet, and contains a two and three story building furnished with steam power. All the machinery and fittings are of the most modern and improved type, and the capacity is from 35,000 to 38,000 boxes of all kinds per day. The factory gives employment to 250 to 300 hands. The trade extends all over the United States. A specialty is the manufacture of "Thiemeyer's Patent" beer and bottle boxes, which have a wide reputation and a large demand. A very large quantity of boxes for the use of canneries is made, and the house is the recognized supply source for many of the large canners.

CROWN CORK & SEAL CO., GUILFORD AVENUE

CANTON BOX COMPANY

A flourishing and representative manufacturing enterprise is the Canton Box Company, manufacturers of boxes and box shooks. The company was incorporated in 1897, with an ample capital and a large investment, under the laws of Maryland. This is one of the largest and best equipped plants of the kind in the United States and does a large business. The plant covers over 400 by 300 feet, with 400 feet of water front, and with a wharf on deep water, where vessels can unload and receive cargo. There are two mills, both used for the manufacture of boxes and box shooks. These mills are most thoroughly fitted with all modern patterns of machinery specially belonging to this line of manufacture, such as nailing and printing machines. The plant is situated at 2515 Boston Street and employs 200 hands. The capacity of the two mills is 60,000 feet of lumber per day, used in the manufacture of boxes and shooks. The company manufactures all kinds and sorts of packing boxes, including those used in the canning industry. The company has a most admirable situation for handling its large business, being connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and also having a water front, and thus enabled to ship to its customers by either rail or boat without loss of time. The business of the company is large and augmenting; the consumption of packing boxes among the fruit and vegetable canners alone is enormous. The firm has a high reputation for quality of product and for the prompt fulfilment of orders. A specialty is the manufacture of special sized boxes to order. The company manufactures wooden boxes only. The officers are: Rufus K. Goodenow, president; John S. Sutton, vice-president, and S. Edward Schwartz, secretary and treasurer.

NORTHEAST CORNER HOWARD AND FAYETTE STREETS

The Alpha Photo-Engraving Co. was established under the laws of Maryland in 1895, with P. T. Blogg, treasurer and general manager, and H. K. Ogier, secretary. Mr. Blogg had been previously connected with Bartgis Bros. Co. and the Lord Baltimore Press, and Mr. Ogier with the Maryland Color Printing Co. The company was originally located at 217 East German Street, where their plant was destroyed by the fire of 1904. The present home of the company is admirably located at the northeast corner of Howard and Fayette Streets, with unsurpassed facilities for the manufacture of photo-engravings and line cuts.

Benj. J. Nusbäum, Woodbrook Avenue.

Chas. Hahn, Assistant Cashier National Mechanics' Bank.

Chas. F. Fiske, Sewing Machine Dealer.

F. L. Schillenberg, Furniture, and more recently the handsome residence of Mr. Louis T. Weis, U. S. Immigration Commissioner at the Port of Baltimore.

Mr. Lucas' "Carbon" paint for tin roofs is highly recommended and widely endorsed.

FLANNERY-GRIFFITHS CO.

BALTIMORE, MD.

This firm was established in 1905 by B. G. Griffiths and M. H. Jones under the firm name of B. G. Griffiths & Co., which firm was later changed to the Flannery-Griffiths Co., composed of M. Frank Flannery and Brighton G. Griffiths. The original location of the firm was 103 Mercer Street, and the present location is 111 Mercer Street. The Flannery-Griffiths Co. are engineers, machinists and contractors, and furnish and install boilers, pumps, engines, marine repairs, general steam and hot-water heating, stationary and steamship supplies, and are special manufacturers of steel dies, special machinery and propeller wheels. Among the important contracts handled by this company are the rebuilding of the 175-kilowatt Armington & Sims engines in Baltimore Post-office Building; also Lipps-Murbach Co., Calverton; installation of the Marine Hospital steam-heating plant, which amply show the capacity and facilities of this company for handling large work.

MACHT BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MD.

UNITED CRAFTSMEN

THE LEGALIZED RESERVE ORDER

HOME OFFICE: 403-404-405 CARROLL BUILDING, BALTIMORE, MD.

The United Craftsmen Insurance Order made its début in the Baltimore insurance field in the fall of 1909—being authorized to operate under a special charter granted by the Maryland Legislature. This order has attracted much attention among insurance experts—especially fraternal organizations.

The United Craftsmen has made rapid strides since it began operating, and the prophecy made by Prof. Walter S. Nicholas—the Yale University insurance lecturer, who in a speech delivered in Baltimore said “that the Maryland organization of the United Craftsmen furnishes a model for organizations of its kind in the country”—has been verified.

The order is safe, sound and scientific, and an opportunity and a privilege awaits the applicant.

Ex-Congressman Thomas A. Smith, of the First Congressional District, is the Supreme President of the order, and Mr. James Higgins, formerly of Cambridge, Md., is the Supreme Secretary.

Mr. Higgins is well and favorably known in Baltimore, where he has a host of friends, being prominently identified in legal circles, having been at one time States Attorney for Dorchester County, Md.

JOHN A. GRIFFITH & COMPANY

IMPORTERS OF TAILORS' TRIMMINGS

BALTIMORE, MD.

John A. Griffith & Co. was established seventy-two years ago, originally by John A. Griffith, James O'Neil and Joseph Maguire. The business is now conducted by Edward A. Griffith, son of John A. Griffith, all the original members of the firm being deceased. The original location of the business was in Cincinnati, and now in Chicago and Baltimore. The first store location of this firm in Baltimore was over Canfield's jewelry store, at the southwest corner of Baltimore and Charles Streets. John A. Griffith & Co. may be justly called the pioneers in their line of business.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE

26 SOUTH STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

Established 1854. This institution has always occupied the original site. August, 1902, a new bank building was erected, which, however, was destroyed by the "big fire," February, 1905. The present magnificent structure was erected and occupied January, 1905—less than one year after the notable conflagration. The National Bank of Commerce claims the distinction of being the first financial institution to occupy a "new home" after the fire. The officers are Eugene Levering, President; Jas. R. Edmunds, Vice-President and Cashier; Magruder Powell and Thomas Hildt, Assistant Cashiers.

JOHN E. HURST & COMPANY

HOPKINS PLACE AND LOMBARD STREET

BALTIMORE, MD.

As a great dry goods market, Baltimore stands in the front rank among the eastern cities, and with its vast assortment of domestic and imported stocks, its low prices and its shipping facilities, commands a trade of national scope. Immense dry goods emporiums have been organized to supply the vast tributary section of which Baltimore is the natural source of supply, and great sums of money are represented by great modern establishments. The oldest and largest house in the dry goods line is that of John E. Hurst & Company, which has been actively identified with the rapid growth of the dry goods jobbing trade of Baltimore since 1831, when the business was founded as Hurst & Co. Later the style became Hurst, Purnell & Co. In 1895 Mr. Purnell withdrew from the business, and the style became as at present. Mr. John E. Hurst died January 6, 1904. The immense trade of the house covers the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast. They are direct importers of dry goods, notions, white goods, gloves, corsets and a varied assortment in this line.
